GERVINUS, GEORG GOTTFRIED, German historian and Shakespearean critic, born in Darmstadt; he was elected to the chair of History at Göttingen in 1836, an appointment which was cancelled the following year by his signing the protest against the abolition of the Hanoverian constitution; in 1844 he was appointed honorary professor at Heidelberg, and subsequently contributed greatly to the establishment of constitutional liberty in Germany by means of his writings and by founding the Deutsche Zeitung there; in 1848 he became a member of the National Assembly, but shortly afterwards withdrew, disgusted with the course things were taking; he now engaged in literary studies, the fruit of which appeared in his celebrated volumes of Shakespearean criticism (1806-1871).

GERYON, a king of Erythraia (i.e. red island), on the western borders of the world, with three bodies and three heads, who had a herd of oxen guarded by a giant shepherd and his dog, the two-throated Orthrus, which were carried off by Hercules at the behest of his fate.

GESENIUS, FRIEDRICH HEINRICH WILHELM, an eminent German Hebraist and Biblical scholar, born in Prussian Saxony, whose labours form an epoch in the study of the Hebrew Scriptures; was 30 years professor of the language in Halle; produced a Hebrew Grammar and Lexicon, and commentary on Isaiah on rationalistic lines (1785-1842).

GESNER, KONRAD VON, Swiss scholar and naturalist, born in Zurich; hampered by ill-health and poverty in his youth, he yet contrived by unremitting diligence to obtain an excellent education at Strasbourg, Bourges, and Paris. In his twenty-first year he obtained an appointment in Zurich University, and in 1537 became professor of Greek at Lausanne; abandoning the idea he entertained of entering the Church, he determined to adopt the medical profession instead, graduated at Basel in 1540, and a year later went to Zurich to occupy the chair of Natural History and to practise as a doctor; his chief works are the "Bibliotheca Universalis" (a catalogue and summary of all Hebrew, Greek, and Latin works then known to exist), and the "Historia Animalium"; these monuments of learning have won him the cognomen of the German Pliny (1516-1565).

GESLER, ALBRECHT, a governor of the forest cantons of Switzerland, who figures in Swiss legend as an oppressor who was shot as related in the tradition of Tell.

GESNER, SALOMON, Swiss poet and artist, born in Zurich; served an apprenticeship to a bookseller in Berlin, and after a sojourn in Hamburg returned to Zurich, where the rest of his life was spent; he published several volumes of poetry, chiefly pastoral and of no great value; his "Death of Abel" is his most notable performance; his tings are mainly landscapes of a conventional kind, several of which he engraved, revealing better taste as an engraver than as an artist (1730-1788).

ROMANORUM (the exploits of the Romans), a collection of short didactic stories, not, however, solely Roman, written in the Latin tongue, probably towards the close of the 18th century, the authorship of which is uncertain, though it is generally recognised as of English origin; the stories are characterised by naïve simplicity, and have served as materials for many notable literary productions; thus Shakespeare owes to this work the plot of Pericles and the incidents of the caskets and the pound of flesh in "The Merchant of Venice," Parnell his "Hermit," Byron his "Three Black Crows," and Longfellow his "King Robert of Sicily."

GETHEMANE, somewhere on the E. of Kedron, half a mile from Jerusalem, at the foot of Mount Olivet, the scene of the Agony of Christ.

GETTYSBURG, a town in Pennsylvania, built on a group of hills 50 m. SW. of Harrisburg; during the Civil War it was the scene of General Meade's famous victory over the Confederates under General Lee on July 3, 1863.

GEYSERS, fountains which from time to time, under the expansion of steam, eject columns of steam and hot water, and which are met with in Iceland, North America, and New Zealand; the most remarkable is the Great Geyser, 70 m. N. of Reikjavik, in Iceland, which ejects a column of water to 60 ft. in height, accompanied with rumblings underground; these eruptions will continue some 15 minutes, and they recur every few hours.

GFROER, AUGUST FRIEDRICH, a learned German historian, born in the Black Forest; educated for the Protestant ministry; in 1828, after residence at Geneva and Rome, started as a tutor of theology, and two years later became librarian at Stuttgart; published a number of historical works, including a "Life of Gustavus Adolphus," "Pope Gregory VII.," a "History of Primitive Christianity," "Church History to the Fourteenth Century"; in this last work he showed a strong leaning to Catholicism; was appointed to the chair of History in the university of Freiburg; was elected to the Frankfort parliament, and finally openly professed the Catholic faith (1808-1861).

GHATS, or GHATS, EASTERN AND WESTERN, two mountain ranges running parallel with the E. and W. coasts of S. India, the latter skirting the Malabar coast between 80 and 40 m. from the sea, rising to nearly 6000 ft., and exhibiting fine mountain and forest scenery, and the former skirting the E. of the Deccan, of which tableland it here forms the buttress, and has a much lower mean level; the two ranges converge into one a short distance from Cape Comorin.

GHAZALI, ABU MOHAMMED AL-, Arabian philosopher, born in Tus, Persia; in 1001 he was appointed professor of Philosophy in Bagdad; four years later he went to Mecca, and subsequently taught at Damascus, Jerusalem, and Alexandria; finally, he returned to his native town and there founded a Sufic college; of his numerous philosophic and religious works the most famous is the "Destruction of the Philosophers," in which he combats the theories and conclusions of the current Arabian scholasticism (1058-1111).

GHAZIPUR, a city of India, on the Ganges, 44 m. N.E. of Benares, capital of the district of that name, in the North-West Provinces; was the headquarters of the Government Opium Department, and trades in rice-water, sugar, tobacco, &c.; contains the ruins of the Palace of Forty Pillars.

GHAZNI, a fortified city of Afghanistan, 7726 ft. above the sea, 85 m. SW. of Kabul; it is the chief strategic point on the military route between Kandahar and Kabul; in the 11th and 12th centuries it was the capital of the Kingdom of Ghaznavides, which stretched from the plains of Delhi to the Black Sea, and which came to an end in 1186.

GHEEL, a town in Belgium, situated on a fertile spot in the midst of the sandy plain called the Campine, 26 m. SE. of Antwerp; it has been for centuries celebrated as an asylum for the insane, who (about 1300) are now boarded out among the peasants; these cottage asylums are under government control, and the board of the patients in most cases is guaranteed.

GHENT, a city of Belgium, capital of East Flanders, situated at the junction of the Scheldt and the Lys, 34 m. NW. of Brussels; rivers and canals divide it into 26 quarters, connected by 270 bridges; in the older part are many quaint and interesting buildings, notably the cathedral of St. Bavon (15th century); it is the first industrial city of Belgium, and is a great emporium of the cotton, woollen, and linen trades; the floriculture is famed, and the flower-shows have won it the name of the "City of Flowers."

GHETTO, an Italian word applied to the quarters set apart in Italian cities for the Jews, to which in former times they were restricted; the term is now applied to the Jews' quarters in any city; equivalent to the English "Jewry."

GIBELLINES, a political party in Italy who, from the 11th to the 14th centuries, maintained the supremacy of the German emperors over the Italian States in opposition to the Guelphs (q.v.).

GIBERTI, LORENZO, an Italian sculptor and designer, born in Florence; his first notable work was a grand fresco in the palace of Malatesta at Rimini in 1400, but his most famous achievement, which immortalised his name, was the execution of two doorways, with bas-relief designs, in the baptistery at Florence; he spent 50 years at this work, and so noble were the designs and so perfect the execution that Michael Angelo declared them fit to be the gates of Paradise (c. 1378-1455).

GILAN, a province of NW. Persia, between the SW. border of the Caspian Sea and the Elburz Mountains; is low-lying, swampy, and unhealthy towards the Caspian, but the rising ground to the S. is more salubrious; wild animals are numerous in the vast forests; the soil, where cleared, is fertile and well cultivated; the Caspian fisheries are valuable; the people are of Iranian descent, and speak a Persian dialect.

GHIRLANDAJO, (i.e. Garland-maker), nickname of Domenico Curradi, an Italian painter, born in Florence; acquired celebrity first as a designer in gold; at 24 he turned to painting, and devoted himself to fresco and mosaic work, in which he won wide-spread fame; amongst his many great frescoes it is enough to mention here "The Descent of the Innocents," at Florence, and "Christ calling Peter and Andrew," at Rome; Michael Angelo was for a time his pupil (1449-1494).

GHUZNIL. See GHAZNIL.

GIANT STARS, are those of large volume and brightness and low density like Arcturus, Betelgeuse, and Aldebaran. See STELLAR EVOLUTION.

GIANTS, in the Greek mythology often confounded with, but distinct from, the Titans (q.v.), being a mere earthly brood of great stature and strength, who thought by their violence to dethrone Zeus, and were with the assistance of Hercules overpowered and buried under Etna and other volcanoes, doomed to continue their impotent grumbling there.

GIANT'S CAUSEWAY, a remarkable headland of columnar basaltic rock in North Ireland, projecting into the North Channel from the Antrim coast at Bengore Head, 7 m. N.E. of Portrush; is an unequal surface 800 yds. long and 80 ft. wide, formed by the tops of the 40,000 closely packed, vertical columns which rise to a height of 400 ft. The legend goes that it was the beginning of a roadway laid down by a giant.

GIAOUR, the Turkish name for an unbeliever in the Mohammedan faith, and especially for a Christian.

GIBBON, a small, black or grey anthropoid ape, native to the Malay peninsula.

GIBBON, EDWARD, historian, born in Putney; his early education was hindered by a nervous complaint, which, however, disappeared by the time he was 14; a wide course of desultory reading had, in a measure, repaired the lack of regular schooling, and when at the age of 15 he was entered at Magdalen College, Oxford, he possessed, as he himself quaintly puts it, "a stock of erudition which might have puzzled a doctor, and a degree of ignorance of which a schoolboy might have been ashamed"; 14 months later he became a convert to Roman Catholicism, and in consequence was obliged to quit Oxford; in the hope of reclaiming him to the Protestant faith he was placed in the charge of the deistical poet Mallet, and subsequently under a Calvinist minister at Lausanne; under the latter's kindly suasion he speedily discarded Catholicism, and during five years' residence established his learning on a solid found; time was also found for the one love episode of his life—an amour with Susanne Curchod, an accomplished young lady, who subsequently became the wife of the French minister M. Necker, and mother of Madame de Staël; shortly after his return to England in 1758 he published in French an Essay on the Study of Literature, and for some time served in the militia; in 1774, having four years previously inherited his father's estate, he entered Parliament, and from 1779 to 1783 was one of the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations; in 1776 appeared the first volume of his great history, "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," the conception of which had come to him in 1764 in Rome whilst "musing amongst the ruins of the Capitol"; in 1787 his great work was finished at Lausanne, where he had resided since 1783 (1737-1794).

GIBBONS, GRINLING, a celebrated wood-carver, born in Rotterdam, but brought up in England; through the influence of Evelyn he obtained a post in the Board of Works, and his marvellous skill as a wood-carver won him the patronage of Charles II., who employed him to furnish ornamental carving for the Chapel of Windsor; much of his best work was done for the nobility, and in many of their mansions his carving is yet extant in all its grace and finish, the ceiling of a room at Petworth being considered his masterpiece; he also did some notable work in bronze and marble (1648-1720).

GIBBONS, ORLANDO, an eminent English musician, composer of many exquisite anthems, madrigals, &c., born in Cambridge; in 1604 he obtained the post of organist in the Chapel Royal, London, and two years later received the degree of Mus. Bae. of Cambridge, while Oxford recognised his rare merits in 1622 by creating him a Mus. Doc.; in the following year he became organist of Westminster Abbey, and in 1625 was in official attendance at Canterbury on the occasion of Charles I.'s marriage, but he did not live to celebrate the ceremony, for which he wrote the music; he is considered the last and greatest of the old Church musicians of England (1583-1625).

GIBBS, JOSIAH WILLARD, American mathematician and physicist; introduced the idea of the phase rule into physical chemistry; professor at Yale University; wrote much on thermodynamics (1839-1903).

GIBBON, a place on the northern slopes of a hill 6 or 7 m. S. of Bethel, and the spot over which Joshua bade the sun stand still; its inhabitants, for a trick they played on the invading Israelites, were condemned to serve them as "beavers of wood and drawers of water."

GIBRALTAR, a promontory of rock, in the S. of Spain, about 2 m. square and over 1400 ft. in height, connected with the mainland by a spit of sand, forming a strong fortress, with a town of the name at the foot of it on the W. side, and with the Strait of Gibraltar on the S., which at its narrowest is 15 m. broad; the rock above the town is a network of batteries, mounted with heavy cannon, and the town itself is a trade entrepot for N. Africa; the rock has been held as a stronghold by the British since 1704.

GIBSON, JOHN, sculptor, born in Gyffin, near Conway, Wales, of humble parentage; after serving an apprenticeship to a cabinet-maker in Liverpool, he took to carving in wood and stone, and, supported by Roscoe, became a pupil of Canova and afterwards of Thorwaldsen in Rome; here he made his home and did his best work; mention may be made of "Thesus and the Kobber," "Anason thrown from her horse," statues of George Stephenson, Peel, and Queen Victoria; in 1836 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy (1790-1868).

GIBSON, THOMAS MILNER, politician, born in Trinidad; graduated at Cambridge; entered Parliament in the Conservative interest, but becoming a convert to Free-Trade principles he went over to the Liberal ranks, and became an active and eloquent supporter of the Manchester policy; returned for Manchester in 1841 and 1846, was made a Privy Councillor and Vice-President of the Board of Trade; his earnest advocacy of peace at the Crimean crisis lost him his seat in Manchester, but Ashton-under-Lyne returned him the same year; under Palmerston he was for seven years (1869-1866) President of the Board of Trade; his name is honourably associated with the repeal of the Advertisement, Newspaper, Stamp, and Paper Duties; in 1868 he retired from public life (1806-1844).

GIDEON, one of the most eminent of the Judges of Israel, famous for his defeat of the Midianites at Gilboa, and the peace of 40 years' duration which it ensured to the people under his rule.

GIESEBRECHT, WILHELM VON, historian, born in Berlin; was professor of History at Königsberg and at Munich; his chief work is "Geschichte der Deutschen Kaiserzeit" (1814-1889).

GIESELER, JOHANN KARL LUDWIG, a learned Church historian, born near Minden; after quitting Halle University adopted teaching as a profession, but in 1813 served in the war against France; on the conclusion of the war he held educational appointments at Minden; was nominated in 1819 to the chair of Theology at Bonn, and in 1831 was appointed to a like professorship in Göttingen; his great work is a "History of the Church" in 6 vols. (1793-1864).

GIESSEN, the chief town of Hesse, situated at the confluence of the Wisseck and the Lahn, 40 m. N. of Frankfurt-on-the-Main; has a flourishing university, and various manufactories.

GIFFORD, ADAM, LORD, a Scottish judge, born in Edinburgh; had a large practice as a barrister, and realised a considerable fortune, which he bequeathed towards the endowment of four lecture-ships on Natural Theology in connection with each of the four universities in Scotland; was a man of a philosophical turn of mind, and a student of Spinoza; held office as a judge from 1870 to 1881 (1820-1887).

GIFFORD, WILLIAM, an English man of letters, born in Ashburton, Devonshire; left friendless and penniless at an early age by the death of his parents, he first served as a cabin-boy, and subsequently for four years worked as a cobler's apprentice; through the generosity of a local doctor, and afterwards of Earl Grosvenor, he obtained a university training at Oxford, where in 1792 he graduated; a period of travel on the Continent was followed in 1794 by his celebrated satire the "Rivind," and in two years later by the "Meviad"; his editorship of the Anti-Jacobin (1797-1798) procured him favour and office at the hands of the Tories; the work of translation, and the editing of Elizabethan poets, occupied him till 1800, when he became the first editor of the Quarterly Review; his writing is vigorous, and marked by strong partisanship, but his bitter attacks on the new literature inaugurated by Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and others reveal a prejudiced and narrow view of literature (1757-1826).

GIL BLAS, a romance by Le Sage, from the name of the hero, a character described by Scott as honestly disposed, but being constitutionally timid, unable to resist temptation, though capable of brave actions and intelligent, but apt to be deceived through vanity, with sufficient virtue to make us love him, but indifferent to our respect.

GILBERT, PARKER, American financier. Before he was 30 he became under-secretary of the United States territory, and on the adoption of the Dawes Plan (q.v.) he became Agent-General for Reparations in Berlin in 1924 (1892-).

GILBERT, SIR HUMPHREY, navigator, born in Devonshire, half-brother of Sir Walter Raleigh; in 1585 established a settlement in Newfoundland (died 1559-1583).

GILBERT, SIR JOHN, English artist, President of the Royal Society of Water-Colour Painters; was for long an illustrator of books, among the number an edition of Shakespeare; he was a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour (1817-1897).

GILBERT, SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK, barrister, notable as a play-writer and as the author of a series of well-known popular comic operas, including "The Mikado," "The Yeomen of the Guard," and "The Gondoliers," set to music by Sir Arthur Sullivan (1836-1911).

GILBERT ISLANDS, or KINGSMILL GROUP, a group of islands in the Pacific, of coral formation, lying on the equator between 172° and 177° E. long; they are 16 in number, were discovered in 1788, and annexed by Britain in 1892 and 1915. They now form a separate colony in the Pacific, which includes Fanning and Washington Islands and the Union Islands; the colony has an area of 180 sq. m. and a population of 30,500; Ocean Island is the seat of government.

GILBOA, MOUNT, a range of hills on the SE. of the Plain of Esdraelon, in Palestine, attaining a height of 1698 ft.

GILDAS, a monkish historian of Britain, who wrote in the 6th century a Latin work entitled "De Excidio Britanniae," which afterwards appeared in two parts, a History and an Epistle.

GILEAD, a tableland extending along the E. of the Jordan, at a general level of 2000 ft. above the sea, the highest point near Ramoth-Gilead being 3597 ft.

GILES, ERNEST, Australian explorer, of English birth, twice penetrated interior from South Australia to West Australia making important discoveries in these and other expeditions (1839-1897).

GILES, ST., the patron saint of cripples, beggars, and lepers; was himself a cripple, due to his refusal to be cured of a wound that he might learn to mortify the flesh; was fed by the milk of a hind that visited him daily; is reputed to have had once at his monastery a long interview with St. Louis, without either of them speaking a word to the other.

GILL, SIR DAVID, astronomer-royal at the Cape (1870-1907); he devoted himself to the compilation of a catalogue of the stars visible in the Southern Hemisphere; studied the movements of the planets, and wrote many papers on astronomical subjects (1843-1914).

GILLESPIE, GEORGE, Scottish divine, born in Kirkcaldy; trained at St. Andrews, and ordained to a charge at Weirys; in 1642 he was called to Edinburgh, and in the following year appointed one of a deputation of four to represent Scotland at the Westminster Assembly; his chief work is "Aaron's Rod Blossoming," a vigorous statement and vindication of his Presbyterianism; in 1648 he was Moderator of the General Assembly (1613-1648).

GILLRAY, JAMES, caricaturist; born in Chelsea; depicted the humours of London life of his day, particularly satirising George III and his court (1757-1816).

GILPIN, JOHN, the hero of the adventurous ride in Cowper's famous poem; the original is stated to have been a linen-draper named Beyer whose residence was in Paternoster Row.

GILPIN, WILLIAM, OF BOLDER, an English author, who by his series of "Picturesque Tours" exercised an influence on English literature similar to that of White's "Selborne," at the same time (1724-1804).

GIOBERTI, VINCENTI, an Italian philosophical and political writer, born in Turin; in 1825 he was appointed to the chair of Theology in his native city, and in 1831 chaplain to the Court of Charles Albert of Sardinia; two years later was exiled on a charge of complicity in the plots of the Young Italy party, and till 1847 remained abroad, chiefly in Brussels, busy with his pen on literary, philosophical, and political subjects; in 1848 he was welcomed back to Italy, and shortly afterwards rose to be Prime Minister of a short-lived government; his later years were spent in diplomatic work at Paris; in philosophy he reveals Platonic tendencies, while his political ideal was a confederated Italy, with the Pope at the head and the king of Sardinia as military guardian (1801-1852).

GIORDANO, LUCA, Italian painter, born in Naples; studied under various celebrated masters at Naples, Rome, Lombardy, and other places, finally returning to Naples; in 1693 he received a commission from Charles II. of Spain to adorn the Escorial, and in the execution of this work remained at Madrid till 1700, when he again settled in his native city; he was famous in his day for marvellous rapidity of workmanship, but this fluency combined with a too slavish adherence to the methods of the great masters has somewhat robbed his work of individuality; his frescoes in the Escorial at Madrid and others in Florence and Rome are esteemed his finest work (1632-1706).

GIORGIONE (i.e. Great George), the sobriquet given to Giorgio Barbarelli, one of the early masters of the Venetian school, born near Castelfranco, in the N.E. of Italy; at Venice he studied under Giovanni Bellini, and had Titian as a fellow-pupil; his portraits are among the finest of the Italian school, and exhibit a freshness of colour and conception and a firmness of touch unsurpassed in his day; his works deal chiefly with scriptural and pastoral scenes, and include a "Holy Family" in the Louvre, "Virgin and Child" in Venice, and "Moses Rescued" (c. 1478-1511).

GIOTTO, a great Italian painter, born at a village near Florence; was a shepherd's boy, and at 10 years of age, while tending his flock and drawing pictures of them, was discovered by Cimabue, who took him home and made a pupil of him; "never," says Ruskin, "checked the boy from the first day he found him, showed him all he knew, talked with him of many things he himself felt unable to paint; made him a workman and a gentleman, above all, a Christian, yet left him a shepherd. . . . His special character among the great painters of Italy was that he was a practical person; what others dreamt of he did; he could work in mosaic, could work in marble, and paint; could build . . . built the Campanile of the Duomo, because he was then the best master of sculpture, painting, and architecture in Florence. . . . Dante was his friend and Titian copied him. While Cimabue still painted the Holy Family in the old conventional style, Giotto went to Nature for his types, and led the way for a transition in art; his paintings and work are to be seen in churches in Padua, Assisi, Naples, and Florence (1276-1337).

GIPSIES, a dwindling nomadic race of Indian origin, speaking a dialect called Romany. They came to Europe about 1400, and in several countries laws were made against them. Modern land enclosure has almost extinguished them in England.

GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS (i.e. Giraldus of Cambria), ecclesiastic and author, born in Fernborough, of Norman descent, studied with distinction in Paris; was a zealous churchman; obtained ecclesiastical preferment in England; was twice elected bishop of St. David's, but both times set aside; travelled in Ireland as well as Wales, and left record of his impressions, which give an entertaining picture and a valuable account of the times, though disfigured by credulity and personal vanity (1147-1223).

GIRARD, STEPHEN, a philanthropist, born in Bordeaux; in early life followed the career of a seaman and rose to be captain of an American coast-trader; in 1769 set up as a trader in Philadelphia, and, in course of time establishing a bank, accumulated an immense fortune; during his lifetime he exhibited a strange mixture of niggardiness, scepticism, public charitableness, and a philanthropy which moved him during a yellow-fever epidemic to labour as a nurse in the hospital; at his death he bequeathed $2,000,000 to found an orphanage for boys, attaching to the bequest the remarkable condition that no clergyman should ever be on the board or ever be permitted to enter the building (1769-1831).

GIRARDIN, EMILE DE, journalist and politician, born in Switzerland, the natural son of General Alexandre de Girardin; took to stockbroking, but quitting it for journalism he soon established a reputation as a ready, vivacious writer, and in 1836 started La Presse, the first French penny paper; his rapid change of front in politics earned for him the nickname of "The Weathercock"; later he adhered to the Republican cause, and founded La France in its interest; he published many political brochures and a few plays, and was for some years editor of La Liberté (1806-1881). His wife, Delphine Gay, enjoyed a wide celebrity both as a beauty and authoress; her poems, plays, and novels fill six vols. (1806-1881).

GIRARDIN, FRANÇOIS SAINT-MARC, a French professor and littérateur, born in Paris; in 1827 was professor in the Collège Louis-le-Grand, and in 1834 was nominated to the chair of Literature in the Sorbonne; as leader-writer in the Journal des Débats he vigorously opposed the Democrats, and sat in the Senate from 1834 to 1848; in 1866, as Saint-Beuve's successor, he took up the editorship of the Journal des Savants, and in 1871 became a member of the National Assembly; he published his collected essays and also his popular literary lectures (1801-1873).

GIRL GUIDES, an international organisation for girls run on the lines of the Boy Scouts (q.v.) and founded by Sir Robert (now Lord) Baden-Powell in 1910.

GIRONDE, a maritime department in SW. France, facing the Bay of Biscay on the W. and lying N. and S. between Charente-Inférieure and Landes; the Garonne and the Dordogne flowing through it form the Gironde estuary, and with their tributaries sufficiently water the undulating land; agriculture and some manufactures flourish, but wine is the chief product.

GIROUDINS, or GIROUDISTS, a party of moderate republican opinions in the French Revolution. The leaders of it were from the Gironde district, whence their name, were in successful members of the Legislative Body and of the Convention, on the right in the former, on the left in the latter, and numbered among them such names as Condorcet, Brissot, Roland, Carnot, and others; they opposed the court and the clerical party, and voted for the death of the king, but sought to rescue him by a proposal of appeal to the people; overpowered by the Jacobins in June, 1793, with whom they came to open rupture, they sought in vain to provoke a rising in their favour; on October 24 they were arraigned before the Revolutionary tribunal, and on the 31st twenty-one of them were brought to the guillotine, singing the "Marseillaise" as they went and on the scaffold, while the rest, all to a few, perished later in either the same way or by their own hands.

GIRTIN, THOMAS, a landscape-painter, born in London; painted in water-colour views of scenes near Paris and London; was a friend of Turner (1775-1802).

GIRTON COLLEGE, one of the two university colleges for women at Cambridge; founded in 1869 at Hitchin and moved in 1873 to Girton, a village 2½ m. outside Cambridge; the students attend all the university lectures and sit for the examinations; they are now allowed to proceed to the B.A. degree under the same conditions as men students; the college numbers about 200 students, the great majority of whom read for an honours degree.

GISSING, GEORGE, British novelist. He published his first book, "Workers in the Dawn," at the age of 22. He tried work as a clerk, emigrated to America, returned to tramp the streets of London, and told of his experiences in "New Grub Street," a book followed by several realistic novels (1857-1903).

GLAZH, or GHIZEH, a town in Egypt, on the Nile, opposite Old Cairo, to which it is joined by a suspension bridge spanning the river; in the neighbourhood are the Great Pyramids.

GLACIER, a more or less snow-white mass of ice occupying an Alpine valley and moving slowly down its bed like a viscous substance, being fed by snow melting upon at the top called nerve and forming streams at the bottom; it has been defined by Prof. J. D. Forbes as "a viscous body which is urged down slopes of a certain inclination by the mutual pressure of its parts"; in the Alps alone glaciers number over 1000.

GLADIATOR, one who fought in the arena at Rome with men or beasts for the amusement of the people, originally in connection with funeral games, under the belief, it is said, that the spirits of the dead were appeased at the sight of blood; exhibitions of the kind were common under the emperors, and held on high occasions; if the gladiator was wounded in the contest, the spectators decided whether he was to live or die by turning their thumbs downwards or upwards.

GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART, statesman, orator, and scholar, born in Liverpool, son of a Liverpool merchant, sometime of Leith, and of Ann, daughter of Andrew Robertson, Morvenway; educated at Eton and Oxford; entered Parliament in 1832 as member for Newark in the Tory interest; delivered his maiden speech on slavery emancipation on May 17, 1833; accepted office under Sir Robert Peel in 1834, and again in 1841 and 1846; and as member for Oxford, separating from the Tory party, took office under Lord Aberdeen, and in 1859, under Lord Palmerston, became Chancellor of the Exchequer; elected member for South Lancashire, 1865, he became leader of the Commons under Lord John Russell; elected for Greenwich, he became Premier for the first time in 1869, holding office till 1875; after a brilliant campaign in Midlothian he was returned for that county in 1880, and became Premier for the second time; became Premier a third time in 1886, and a fourth time in 1892. During his tenure of office he introduced and carried a great number of important measures, but failed from desertion in the Liberal ranks to carry his pet measure of Home Rule for Ireland, so he retired from office into private life in 1895; his last days he spent chiefly in literary work, the fruit of which, added to earlier works, gives evidence of the breadth of his sympathies and the extent of his scholarly attainments; but being seized by a fatal malady, his strong constitution gradually sank, and he died at Hawarden, May 19, 1898; he was buried in Westminster Abbey at the expense of the nation. He was a man of high moral character, transcendent ability, and strong will, and, from the day he took the lead, the acknowledged chief of the Liberal party in the country (1809-1898).

GLAISHER, JAMES, meteorologist and founder of the Royal Meteorological Society, born in London; his first observations in meteorology were done as an officer of the Irish Ordnance Survey; in 1836, after service in the Cambridge Observatory, he went to Greenwich, and from 1840 to 1874 he superintended the meteorological department of the Royal Observatory; in connection with atmospheric investigations he made a series of 28 balloon ascents, rising on one occasion to a height of 7 m., the greatest elevation yet attained (1809-1903).

GLAMORGAN, a maritime county in S. Wales, fronting the Bristol Channel, between Monmouth and Carmarthen; amid the hilly country of the N. lie the rich coal-fields and ironstone quarries which have made it the most populous and the wealthiest county of Wales; the S. country—the garden of Wales—is a succession of fertile valleys and wooded slopes; dairy-farming is extensively engaged in, but agriculture is somewhat backward; the large towns are engaged in the coal-trade and in the smelting of iron, copper, lead, and tin; some interesting Roman remains exist in the county.

GLANVILL, JOSEPH, born in Plymouth, graduated at Oxford; was at first an Aristotelian and Puritan in his opinions, but after the Restoration entered the Church, and obtained preferment in various sees; his fame rests upon his eloquent appeal for freedom of thought in "The Vanity of Dogmatizing" (1661) and upon his two works in defence of a belief in witches; he was one of the first Fellows of the Royal Society; he seems to have made Sir Thomas Browne his model, though he is not equal to him in the vigour of his thinking or the harmony of his style (1636-1680).

GLANVILL, RANULF DE, Chief Justiciary of England in the reign of Henry II., born in Stratford, in Suffolk; is the author of the earliest treatise on the laws of England, a work in 14 books; was deposed by Richard I., and, joining the Crusaders, fell before Acre; d. 1190.

GLASGOW, the second city of the empire and the chief centre of industry in Scotland, is situated on the Clyde, in Lanarkshire, 45 m. W. from Edinburgh and 406 from London; it is conjectured that the origin of the name is found in Glaschu ("beloved green spot"), the name of a Celtic village which occupied the site previously, near which St. Mungo, or Kentigern, erected his church about A.D. 560; although a royal burgh in 1336, it was not till after the stimulus to trade occasioned by the Union (1707) that it began to display its now characteristic mercantile activity; since then it has gone forward by leaps and bounds, owing not a little of its success to its exceptionally favourable situation; besides the advantages of waterway derived from the Clyde, it is in the heart of a rich coal and iron district; spinning and weaving, shipbuilding, foundries, chemical and iron works, and all manner of industries flourish; the city is speciously and handsomely laid out; the cathedral (1197) is the chief building of historical and architectural interest; there is a university (1451) and a variety of other colleges, besides several public libraries and art schools; Glasgow returns fifteen members to Parliament.

GLASS, a compound of silica with various basic oxides, e.g. soda, potash, lime; it is prepared from sand, which is melted at a very high temperature; the ordinary glass used for bottles, windows, &c., contains soda and lime and has a low melting-point; Bohemian or hard glass contains potash and has a higher melting-point; flint glass, containing potash and lead is used for ornamental cut-glass.

GLASSE, MRS., an 18th-century authoress of a cookery book, once in wide-spread repute; credited with the sage prescription, "First catch your hare."

GLASSITES, a Christian sect founded in Scotland about 1730 by John Glas (1695-1778), a minister of the Church of Scotland, who in 1730 was deposed for denouncing all national establishments of religion as "inconsistent with the true nature of the Church of Christ," and maintaining that a Church and its office-bearers owed allegiance to none other than Christ; the sect, which developed peculiarities of doctrine and worship in conformity with those of the primitive Church, spread to England and America, where they became known as Sandemanians, after Robert Sandeman (1718-1771), son-in-law to Glas, and his zealous supporter.

GLASTONBURY, an ancient town in Somersetshire, 36 m. S. of Bristol, on the Brue; it is associated with many interesting legends and historical traditions that point to its existence in very early times; thus it was the Avdon of Arthurian legend, and the place where Joseph of Arimathea, when he brought the Holy Grail, is said to have founded the first Christian Church; ruins are still extant of the old abbey founded by Henry II., which it succeeded the ancient abbey of St. Dunstan (940); there is trade in gloves, hats, rugs, &c.

GLAUBER, JOHN RUDOLPH, German chemist, discoverer of Glauber's salt, a crystalline form of sulphate of soda used in medicine (1604-1668).

GLAZEBROOK, SIR RICHARD TETLEY, British scientist, worked in the Cavendish Laboratory, Cambridge, for several years; director of the National Physical Laboratory, Teddington, 1899-1919; he carried out much research in physics, especially electricity, and wrote several books (1854-).

GLEIM, LUDWIG, German lyric poet, known as Father Gleim for the encouragement he gave to young German authors; composed war songs for the Prussian army (1719-1803).

GLENCOE, a wild and desolate glen in the N. of Argyllshire, running eastward from Ballachulish 10 m.; shut in by two lofty and rugged mountain ranges; the One flows through the valley and enhances its lonely grandeur. See following.

GLENCOE, MASSACRE OF, a treacherous slaughter of the Macdonalds of that glen on the morning of February 13, 1691, to the number of 88, in consequence of the belated submission of Maclean, the chief, to William and Mary after the Revolution; the perpetrators of the deed were a body of soldiers led by Captain Campbell, who came among the people as friends, and stayed as friends among them for 12 days.

GLENDOWER, OWEN, a Welsh chief and patriot, a descendant of the old Welsh princes, who stirred up a rebellion against the English under Henry IV., which, with the help of the Percies of Northumberland and Charles VI. of France, he conducted with varied success for years, but eventual failure (1349-1415). See Shakespeare's "Henry IV."

GLENLIVET, a valley in Banffshire, through which the Livet Water runs, about 20 m. SW. of Huntly; famed for its whisky.

GLENROY, a narrow glen 14 m. long, in Inverness-shire, in the Lochaber district; Fort William lies 13 m. NE. of its SW. extremity; the Roy flows through the valley; the steep sides are remarkable for three regular and distinctly-formed shelves or terraces running parallel almost the entire distance of the glen, the heights on either side exactly corresponding; these are now regarded as the margins of a former loch which gradually sank as the barrier of glacial ice damming up the waters slowly melted.

GLOBULAR CLUSTERS, dense groups of stars at great distances; 69 are known and each contains several thousand stars; these groups are believed to be outside our galaxy and to form isolated stellar systems comparable to ours; the best known cluster is that in the constellation Hercules.

GLOGAU, a town with a strong fortress in Silesia, on the Oder, 35 m. NW. of Liegnitz; is a place of manufacture; was brilliantly taken by Frederick the Great in the Silesian War on March 9, 1741, by escalade, in one hour, at the very break of day.

GLONDEEN, or STON-ELV (i.e. Great River), the largest river in Norway; has its source in Lake Anund, and, after a southward course of 360 m., broken by many falls, and for the most part un navigable, discharges into the Skager Rack at Frederikstad.

GLORIANA, Queen Elizabeth, represented in her capacity as sovereign in Spenser's "Faerie Queen."

GLOUCESTER, (1) county town of Gloucestershire, on the Severn, 38 m. NE. of Bristol; a handsomely laid out town, the main lines of its ground-plan testifying to its Roman origin; conspicuous among several fine buildings is the cathedral, begun in 1088 (restored in 1858) and exhibiting features of Perpendicular and Norman architecture; the river, here tidal, is spanned by two stone bridges, and a flourishing commerce is favoured by fine locks and a canal; chemicals, iron, etc., are manufactured. (2) A seaport of Massachusetts, U.S., 80 m. NE. of Boston; is a favourite summer resort, an important fishing-station, and has an excellent harbour; granite is hewn in large quantities in the neighbouring quarries.

GLOUCESTER, DUKE OF (Prince Henry), 3rd son of King George V. and Queen Mary. Born at Sandringham, he was educated at Eton and took a commission in the Army in 1919. In 1928 he was made Duke of Gloucester.

GLOUCESTER, ROBERT OF, English chronicler; was a monk of Gloucester Abbey, and lived in the 13th century; his chronicle, which is in verse, traces the history of England from the siege of Troy to 1271, the year before the accession of Edward I.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE, a west midland county of England, which touches Warwick in the centre of the country, and extends SW. to the estuary of the Severn; it presents three natural well-defined districts, known as the Hills, formed by the Cotswold Hills in the E.; the Vale, through which the Severn runs, in the centre; the Forest of Dean (the largest in England) in the W.; coal is wrought in two large fields, but agricultural and dairy-farming are the main industries; antiquities abound; the principal rivers are the Wye, Severn, Lower and Upper Avon, and Thames; Bristol (q.v.) is the largest town.

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY, religious leader and writer. He has held various professorships, became known as a leader of modernism, and in 1926 became President of the Baptist Union (1886-).

GLÜCK, CHRISTOPH VON, a German musical composer and reformer of the opera; made his first appearance in Vienna; studied afterwards for some years under San-Martini of Milan, and brought out his first opera "Artaxerxes," followed by seven others in the Italian style; invited to London, he studied Handel, attained a loftier ideal, and returned to the Continent, where, especially at Vienna and Paris, he achieved his triumphs, becoming founder of a new era in operatic music; in Paris he had a rival in Fucini, and the public opinion was for a time divided, but the production by him of "Iphigenia in Aulis" and "Iphigenia in Tauris" established his superiority, and he carried off the palm (1714-1787).

GLUCOSE, or DEXTROSE, is found in the juices of grapes and other fruits; it is manufactured from starch by the action of sulphuric acid and is used for confectionery, jam, and brewing.

GLYCERIDE, or GLYCEROL, a thick liquid with a sweet taste, manufactured from fats and from the waste products of soap works; it is used extensively in the manufacture of nitroglycerine (q.v.).

GNÆUS, an altered form of granite in which the minerals are separated into bands or "foliated." It occurs abundantly amongst all ancient rocks, and in some cases is hardly distinguishable from granite.

GNOMES, a set of imaginary beings, misshapen in form and of diminutive size, viewed as inhabiting the interior of the earth and presiding over its secret treasures.

GNOSTICISM, hereticism, consisting of various sects that arose in the Apostolic age of Christianity, and that sought, according to the philosophic opinions which they had severally embraced, to extract an esoteric meaning out of the letter of Scripture and the facts especially of the Gospel history, such as only those of superior speculative insight could appreciate; they set a higher value on Knowledge (gnosis), whence their name) than Faith; thus their understanding of Christianity was speculative, not spiritual, and their knowledge of it was that of thinking, not of life; like the Jews they denied the possibility of the Word becoming flesh and of a realisation of the infinite in the finite; indeed, Gnosticism was at once a speculative and a practical denial that Christ was God manifest in the flesh, and that participation in Christianity was, as He presented it (John vi. 53), participation in His flesh.

GOA, a Portuguese possession in W. India, lying between the Western Ghats and the sea-coast, 250 m. SE. of Bombay; large quantities of rice are raised in it; it is hilly on the E. and covered with forests; it was captured in 1510 by Albuquerque. Old Goa, the former capital, has fallen from a populous and wealthy city into utter decay, its place being taken by Nova Goa, or Panjim, on the Mandavi, 8 m. from the coast.

GOBELINS, GILLES AND JEAN, brothers, celebrated dyers, who in the 15th century introduced into France the art of dyeing in series, subsequently adding on tapestry-weaving to their establishment; their works in Paris were taken over by government in Louis XIV.'s reign, and the tapestry of gorgeous design, then put forth became known as Gobelins; Le Brun, the famous artist, was for a time chief designer, and the tapestries turned out in his time have a world-wide celebrity; the works are still in operation, and a second establishment, supported by government, for the manufacture of Gobelins exists at Beauvais.

GOBI DESERT, in Chinese known as the Shamo or Han-Hai (sea of sand), largely a trackless waste in E. Turkestan and Mongolia, extending for 1500 m. from E. to W., with an average breadth of 400 m.; is bounded on the W. by the Pamirs and on the E. by the Khingan range; explored by Sven Hedin.

GODAV'ARI, an important river of India, rises on the E. side of W. Ghats, traverses in a SE. direction the entire Deccan, and, forming a large delta, falls into the Bay of Bengal by seven mouths after a course of 900 m.; its mighty volume of water supplies irrigating and navigable canals for the whole Deccan; it is one of the 12 sacred rivers of India, and on it in 12 years a bathing festival is celebrated on its banks.

GODFREY OF BOUILLOM, a renowned Crusader, eldest son of Eustace II., Count of Boulogne; he served with distinction under the Emperor Henry II., being present at the storming of Rome in 1084; his main title to fame rests on the gallantry and devotion he displayed in the first Crusade, of which he was the principal leader; a series of victories led up to the capture of Jerusalem in 1099, and he was proclaimed "Defender and Baron of the Holy Sepulchre," but declined to wear a king's crown in the city where his Saviour had borne a crown of thorns; his defeat of the sultan of Egypt at Ascalon in the same year confirmed him in the possession of Palestine (1081-1100).

GODIVA, LADY, wife of Leofric, Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry, who, according to legend, rode in vain with her husband on behalf of the inhabitants of the place for relief from heavy exactions he had laid upon them, till one day he relented and said he would grant her prayer if she would ride through Coventry on horseback naked; this, with his leave, she at once undertook to do, not one soul of the place peering through a window to look at her save Peeping Tom, who paid for his curiosity by being smitten with blindness.

GODOLPHIN, SYDNEY GODOLPHIN, EARL OF, a celebrated English statesman and financier, born at Godolphin Hall, near Helston, Cornwall; at 19 was a royal page in the Court of Charles II., and in 1678 engaged on a political mission in Holland; in the following year entered Parliament and was appointed to a post in the Treasury, of which, five years later, he became First Commissioner, being at the same time raised to the peerage; under James II. was again at the head of the Treasury, and at the Revolution supported James, till the abdication, when he voted in favour of a regency; on the elevation of William to the throne was immediately reinstated at the Treasury, where he continued eight years, till the Whig ascendancy brought about his dismissal; for six months in 1700 he once more assumed his former post, and under Anne fulfilled the duties of Lord High-Treasurer from 1702 to 1710, administering the finances with sagacity and integrity during the great campaigns of his friend Marlborough, and in 1706 he was created an Earl (1641-1712).

GODOY, MANUEL DE, minister of Charles IV. of Spain, born in Badajoz; played a conspicuous part in the affairs of Spain during the French Revolution and the Empire; received the title of Prince of Peace for an offensive and defensive treaty he concluded with France in 1796, in opposition to the general wish of the nation; lost all and died in Paris (1767-1851).

GODWIN, Earl of the West Saxons, a powerful English noble of the 11th century and father of Harold II.; first came into prominence in the reign of Cnut; was created an earl previous to 1018, and shortly afterwards became related to the king by marriage; he was a zealous supporter of Harthnut in the struggle which followed the demise of Cnut; subsequently was instrumental in raising Edward the Confessor to the throne, to whom he gave his daughter Edith in marriage; continued for some years virtual ruler of the kingdom, but in 1061 his opposition to the growing Norman influence brought about his banishment and the confiscation of his estates; in 1052 he returned to England and was received with so great popular acclaim that the king was forced to restore to him his estates and offices; d. 1053.

GODWIN, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, an English authoress, and first publicly to assert the Rights of Women, born in Hoxton, of humble Irish parentage; at 19 she began to support herself by teaching, and continued to do so till 1788, when she established herself in London to push her way as a writer, having already published "Thoughts on the Education of Daughters"; in 1791 she replied to Burke's "Reflections," and in the following year appeared her famous "Vindication of the Rights of Women"; while in Paris in 1793 she formed a liaison with an American, Captain Inlay, whose desertion of her two years later induced her to attempt suicide by drowning; in 1796 she became attached to William Godwin, a friend of five years' standing, and with him lived for some months, although, in accord with their own pronounced opinions, no marriage ceremony had been performed; in deference to the opinions of others, however, they departed from this position, and a marriage was duly celebrated five months before the birth of their daughter Mary (Shelley's second wife); contemporary opinion shows her to have been generous and gentle of nature, and animated throughout by a noble zeal for the welfare of humanity (1759-1797).

GODWIN, WILLIAM, a political writer and novelist, the son of a Presbyterian minister, born in Wilsbeach, Cambridgeshire; was educated for the Church, and was for five years in the ministry; during this period his opinions on politics and religion underwent a radical change, and when in 1787 he threw up his holy office to engage in literature, he had become a republican in the one and a freethinker in the other; various works had come from his pen, including three novels, before his celebrated "Political Justice" appeared in 1793. "Caleb Williams," a novel, and his best-known work, being published in the following year; in 1797 he married Mary Wollstonecraft (see preceding), who died the same year, and four years later he married a widow, Mrs. Clement; to the close of his long life he was a prolific writer on literary, historical, and political subjects, but his carelessness and lack of business habits left him little profit from all his literary activity; his writings are clear and vigorous in the expression, if visionary and impracticable in theory (1768-1836).

GOETHE, JOHANN WOLFGANG VON, German poet, born in Frankfurt-on-the-Main 10 years before Robert Burns, died in the small duchy of Weimar the same year as Sir Walter Scott; was the son of an imperial chancellor, a formal man and his pedagogue in boyhood, and of Elizabeth Textor, daughter of the chief magistrate of the city, a woman of bright intelligence, who was only eighteen at the time of his birth. Spiritually and bodily he was perfectly formed, symmetrically proportioned, justly balanced, and completely cultivated; his priceless value to the world lies in this, that in his philosophy and life there is found the union in one of what to smaller people appears entirely and absolutely antagonistic. Of utmost scientific scepticism and highest spiritual faith and worth. Carlyle, who is never done recalling his worth, confesses an indebtedness to him which he found it beyond his power to express. His life lies latent in his successive works, above all in "Goetz," in "Werther," in "Faust," and in "Meister." Of the last of the four works named, Carlyle once said, "There are some ten pages of that book that, if ambition had been my object, I would rather have written than all the literature of my time." In addition to his vast literary labour, poems and dramas, he was engaged in the study of science, making discoveries in comparative anatomy and in optics (1749-1832).

GOETZ VON EBERSTEIN (of the Iron Hand), a German knight of the 10th century; was involved in turbulent movements, and lost his right hand at the siege of Landslut, which he replaced by one of his own invention made of steel; spent his life in feuds, and left an autobiography which interested Goethe, who dramatised his story, "to save," as he said, "the memory of a brave man from darkness," a drama that had the honour of being translated by Sir Walter Scott.

GOG AND MAGOG, names that occur in the Bible of foes of Israel, and designative in the Apocalypse of enemies of the kingdom of God, as also of a Scythian tribe, N. of the Caucasus. The names are applied likewise to two giants, survivors of a race said to have been found in Britain by Brutus of Troy, chiefs of whom are in the Guildhall, symbolic defenders of the city, though, actually, the two represent Gogmagog, a legendary British giant.

GOGOL, NICOLAI VASILIEVITCH, a popular Russian novelist, born in Poltava; in 1829 he started as a writer in St. Petersburg, but met with little success till the appearance of his "Evenings in a Farm near Dikanka"; the success of the included sketches of provincial life induced him to produce a second series in 1834, which are characterised by the same freshness and fidelity to nature; in 1837 appeared his masterpiece, "Dead Souls," in which all his powers of pathos, humour, and satire are seen at their best; for some time he tried public teaching, being professor of History at St. Petersburg, and from 1836 to 1846 lived chiefly at Rome; many of his works, which rank beside those of Pushkin and Turgenev, are translated into English (1809-1852).

GOLDONDA, a fortified town in the Nizam's dominions, 7 m. W. of Hyderabad; famous for its diamonds, found in the neighbourhood; beside it are the ruins of the ancient city, the former capital of the old kingdom; the fort is garrisoned, and is the treasury of the Nizam; it is also a State prison.

GOLD occurs in the metallic state in quartz rocks and in deposits laid down as the result of the denudation of these rocks; it is extracted by the cyanide process; gold is unaffected by the action of strong nitric acid but can be dissolved by aqua regia, a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids; British gold coins contain about 8 per cent. of copper.

GOLD COAST, a British crown colony on the Gulf of Guinea, West Africa, with a coastline of 850 m.; from the low and marshy foreshore the country slopes upward and inward to Ashanti; the climate is very unhealthy; palm-oil, india-rubber, gold dust, &c., are exported; Cape Coast Castle is the capital.

GOLDEN AGE, the age of happy innocence under the reign of Cronos or Saturn, in which, as fabled, the earth yielded all fullness without toil, and every creature lived at peace with every other; the term is applied to the most flourishing period in the history of a nation. See AGE.

GOLDEN ASS, a romance of Apuleius (q.v.).

GOLDEN BULL, an Imperial edict, issued by the Emperor Charles IV., which determined the law in the matter of the Imperial elections, and that only one member of each electoral house should have a vote; so called from the gold case enclosing the Imperial seal attached.

GOLDEN FLEECE, the fleece of a ram which Phryxos (q.v.), after he had sacrificed him to Zeus, gave to Aëtes, king of Colchis, who hung it on a sacred oak, and had it guarded by a monstrous dragon; it was the object of the Argonautic expedition under Jason to recover and bring back the fleece to Greece, an object which they achieved. See ARGONAUTS.

GOLDEN FLEECE, ORDER OF THE, an order of knighthood founded by Philip III., Duke of Burgundy and the Netherlands in 1429, and instituted for the protection of the Church.

GOLDEN HORN, the inlet on which Constantinople is situated.

GOLDEN LEGEND, a collection of lives of saints and other tales, such as that of the "Seven Sleepers" and "St. George and the Dragon," made in the 13th century by Jacques de Voragine, a Dominican monk, to the glory especially of his brotherhood.

GOLDEN ROSE, a cluster of roses on a thorny stem, all of gold; perfumed, and blessed by the Pope on the fourth Sunday in Lent, and sent to a prince who has during the year shown most zeal for the Church.

GOLDONI, CARLO, the founder of Italian comedy, born in Venice; in his youth he studied medicine and subsequently law, but in 1732 appeared as a dramatist with his tragedy "Bellisario"; moving from place to place as a strolling-player, he in 1736 returned to Venice, and, finding his true vocation in comedy-writing, turned out a rapid succession of sparkling character plays after the manner of Molière; in 1761 he went to Paris as a playwright to the Italian theatre; became Italian master to Louis XV's daughters, and subsequently was pensioned; his comedies displaced the burlesques and farces till then in vogue on the stage in Italy (1707-1793).

GOLDSCHMIDT, MADAME. See LIND, JENNY.

GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, English man of letters, born in Pallas or Pallasmore, co. Longford, Ireland, and celebrated in English literature as the author of the "Vicar of Wakefield"; a born genius, but of careless ways, and could not be trained to any profession, either in the Church, in law, or in medicine, though more or less intended for all three in succession; set out on travel on the Continent without a penny, and supported himself by his dute and other unknown means; came to London, tried acting and teaching, then literature, doing hack-work, his first work in that department being "An Inquiry into the Present State of Polite Learning in Europe," which was succeeded by his "Citizen of the World"; became a member of the "Literary Club," and associated with Johnson, Reynolds, Burke, and others; produced poems, "The Traveller" and the "Deserted Village," besides comedies, such as "She Stoops to Conquer"; lived extravagantly, and died in debt; wrote histories of Greece and Rome, and "Animated Nature" (1728-1774).

GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY, THE, one of the oldest Livery Companies of the City of London. It received its charter from Richard II.

GOLF, a game played with long clubs and a small ball on commons with short grass, in which the player who drives the ball into a succession of small holes in the ground, usually 18, with the fewest strokes, or who reckons up the most holes in the round by taking them with the fewest strokes, is the winner; played since early times in Scotland, and introduced into England by James I. The most notable golf club in the world is the Royal and Ancient at St. Andrews, which frequently has Royalty for Captain. Growing rapidly in popularity after about 1850, golf is now played by women as well as men; Britain and America compete for the Ryder Cup, while other events are the Open, Amateur, and Professional championships. Famous golfers have been Duncan, Herd, Ball, Braid, Cotton, and B. Jones.

GOLGOTHA (s.e. place of a skull), the scene of Christ's crucifixion, identified with a small hill to the north of Jerusalem.

GOLIATH, a Philistine giant of Gath slain by David with pebbles from a brook thrown by a sling (1 Sam. xvii.).

GOMARISTS, a sect of Calvinists in Holland, so called from their leader Gomarus (1583-1641), a bitter enemy of Arminius (q.v.).

GONCOURT, EDMOND AND JULES DE, French novelists, born, the former in Nancy, the latter in Paris; a habit of elaborate note-taking whilst on sketching tours first drew the brothers towards literature and inoculated them with the habit of minute and accurate observation which gave value to their subsequent writings; their first real venture was a series of historical studies, designed to reproduce with every elaboration of detail French society in the later half of the 18th century, including a "History of French Society during the Revolution"; later they found their true province in the novel, and a series of striking works of fiction became the product of their joint labours, works which have influenced subsequent novelists not a little; "Les Hommes de Lettres" (1860) was the first of these, and "Madame Gervaisals" (1860) is perhaps their best; their collaboration was broken in 1870 by the death of Jules; but Edmond still continued to write, and produced amongst other novels "La Fille Elisa," the "Journal" of the brothers appeared in 1888 in six vols. (Edmond, 1822-1896; Jules, 1830-1870).

GONDAR, a once populous city and the capital of Amhara (q.v.), situated on a beautiful ridge in the Wogra Mountains, 23 m. N. of Lake Tzana; there are ruins of an old castle, churches and mosques, and establishments for the training of Abyssinian priests.

GONERIL, an unnatural daughter of King Lear.

GONSALEZ, a Spanish hero of the 10th century, celebrated for his adventures, whose life was twice saved by his wife.

GONZAGA, the name of a princely family from Bergamo, settled in Mantua, from which the dukes were descended who ruled the territory from 1828 to 1708; one of the family, Luigi (1564-1591), was canonised as St. Alexander (q.v.).

GONZALVO DI CORDOVA (the popular name of Gonzalo Hernandez y Aguilar), a renowned Spanish soldier, born in Montilla, near Cordova; he first became prominent in the wars with the Moors of Granada and with Portugal, and was rewarded with an estate and pensioned; in 1498 he so distinguished himself in assisting the king of Naples (Ferdinand II.) to drive out the French that he became known henceforth as El Gran Capitan, and was created Duke of San Angelo; subsequent heroic achievements in Naples, which won the kingdom for Spain (1503), roused a feeling of jealousy in the Spanish king, so that Gonzalvo was recalled and ill-treated for his great services (1453-1515).

GOOD FRIDAY, the Friday before Easter, held sacred from early times by the Church in commemoration of the crucifixion of Christ, observed originally with fasting and prayer.

GOOD REGENT, the Regent Murray (q.v.).

GOOD TEMPLARS, a total abstinence fraternity organised in New York in 1851, which has lodges, subordinate, district, and grand, now all over the world; they exact a pledge of lifelong abstinence from intoxicating drink, and advocate the suppression of the vice by statute; there is a juvenile section pledged to abstinence from tobacco, gambling, and bad language, as well as drink.

GOODMAN OF BALLENGEIGH, a name assumed by James V. of Scotland in his disguised nocturnal perambulations about Edinburgh.

GOODER, JOHN, eminent Scottish anatomist, born in Anstruther; was trained at St. Andrews and Edinburgh, in which latter city he served an apprenticeship in dentistry; he settled in Anstruther and there wrote his noted essay on "Teeth"; in 1840 he became keeper of the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh, and lecturer on Diseases of the Bones in 1842; four years later he succeeded Dr. Monro in the chair of Anatomy in Edinburgh University, which he adorned, having for some time previously acted as assistant (1814-1867).

GOODWIN SANDS, a famous sandbank stretching 10 m. along the E. coast of Kent, about 51 m. from the shore; with the flowing of the tidal current the hidden sands are apt to shift and change their outline, and when storms of great violence sweep over them, despite their being well marked by four lightships and nine buoys, they have often been the occasion of a long series of melancholy shipwrecks; the shoal forms a splendid breakwater for the Downs, an excellent anchorage stretching between the Goodwins and the shore; they are supposed popularly to be the remnants of an estate which belonged to the great Earl of Godwin (q.v.), but this supposition is dependent upon legend; it is recorded that they were swallowed up by the sea in 1099.

GOODY TWO SHOES, a character in a nursery story published in 1765, and supposed to have been written by Goldsmith when in straits.

GOODYEAR, CHARLES, the inventor of vulcanised rubber, born in New Haven, Connecticut; his career was a troubled one; he failed as an iron-founder, and when, after 10 years' labour, amidst every disadvantage of poverty and privation, he in 1844 produced his new method of hardening rubber by means of sulphur, he became involved in a fresh series of troubles, as well as poverty, consequent on the infringement of his inventions; his patents latterly amounted to 60, and medals and honours were awarded him both in London and Paris (1800-1860).

GOORKHAS, or GURKHAS, a brave and powerful native race in Nepal claiming Hindu descent; in 1814 they were subdued by the British, and have since rendered valuable service to Britain in the Mutiny, in the Afghan and Sikh Wars, and in the Great War; there are now ten regiments of Goorkhas.

GOOSENS, EUGENE, British composer and conductor. Born in London, he joined the Queen's Hall Orchestra; after an extensive musical education conducted the Becham Opera Company in 1915, besides composing several orchestral and vocal pieces (1893-).

GORDIAN KNOT, a knot by which the yoke was fastened to the beam of the chariot of Gordius (q.v.), and which no one could untie except the man who was destined to be the conqueror of Asia; Alexander the Great, being ambitious to achieve this feat, tried hard to undo it, but failing, cut it with his sword and marched on to conquest.

GORDIANUS, the name of three Roman Emperors, father, son, and grandson. Marcus Antonius Gordianus, surnamed Africanus, rose to be an aedile, consul twice, and subsequently became proconsul of Africa; on the deposition of the Emperor Maximinus in 238, he, then in his eightieth year, was proclaimed emperor, his son (b. A.D. 192) being associated with him in the imperial office; grief at the death of his son, killed in battle, caused him to commit suicide a month after he had assumed the purple; he was a man of refined and generous nature. Marcus Antonius Gordianus, grandson of preceding, was early raised to the dignity of Caesar, and in 238, while only fifteen, was proclaimed emperor; his most important achievement was his driving back of the Persians beyond the Euphrates and his relief of Antioch; he was assassinated in 244 by his own soldiers while preparing to cross the Euphrates.

GORDIUS, a boor, the father of Midas (q.v.), who was proclaimed king of Phrygia because he happened, in response to the decree of an oracle, to be the first to ride into Gordium during a particular assembly of the people; he rode into the city on a wagon, to which the yoke was attached by the Gordian knot, and which he dedicated to Zeus.

GORDON, ADAM LINDSAY, Australian poet; author of "Bush Ballads and Galloping Rhymes" and other verse dealing with colonial life; died by his own hand (1833-1870).

GORDON, GENERAL CHARLES GEORGE, born in Woolwich, son of an artillery officer; entered the Royal Engineers; served in the Crimea as an officer in that department, and was, after the war, employed in defining the boundaries of Asiatic Turkey and Russia; being employed in 1860 on a mission to square up matters with the Chinese, on the settlement of the quarrel lent himself to the Emperor in the interest of good order, and it was through him that the Taiping Rebellion in 1863-1864 was extinguished, whereby he earned the title of "Chinese" Gordon; he returned to England in 1866, and was for the next six years engaged in completing the defences of the Thames at Gravesend; he was Vice-Consul of the delta of the Danube during 1871-1873, at the end of which term he conducted an expedition into Africa under the Khedive of Egypt, and was in 1877 appointed governor of the Sudan; he relinquished this post in 1880, and in 1884, the English Government having resolved to evacuate the Sudan, he was commissioned to superintend the operations, and started at once, and arrived at Khartoum in February of that year, where, by the end of April, all communication between him and Cairo was cut off; an expedition was fitted out for his relief, but was too late in arriving, the place was stormed by the Arabs, and he with his comrades fell dead under a volley of Arab musketry, January 26; from the commencement to the close of his career he distinguished himself as a genuine Christian and a brave man (1833-1885).

GORDON, LORD GEORGE, anti-Papal agitator, born in London, son of the third Duke of Gordon; he adopted the navy as a profession, and rose to be lieutenant; entered Parliament and made himself conspicuous by his indiscriminate attacks on both Whigs and Tories; gave a passionate support to the London Protestant Association, formed for the purpose of bringing about the repeal of the Catholic Emancipation Bill of 1778; in 1780, as president of the Association, took the leading part in the famous No Popery riots in London; was tried but acquitted, mainly through the eloquent defence of Erskine; subsequently he was excommunicated for contempt of court, and eventually, after endeavouring to escape prosecution for two treasonable pamphlets, was apprehended, but acquitted as being insane; he died in Newgate (1751-1793).

GORDON, SIR JOHN WATSON, a portrait-painter, born in Edinburgh; was a pupil of Raeburn, and his successor as a painter of portraits; executed portraits of most of the eminent Scotchmen of his time, and among the number Sir Walter Scott, the Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Cockburn, Dr. Chalmers, and Professor Wilson (1786-1844).

GORE, CHARLES, one time bishop of Oxford, a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, and an exponent of High Church tenets; the editor of Lus Mundi, and the author of the Bampton Lecture for 1891, on "The Incarnation of the Son of God" (1859-).

GÖRGEI, ARTHUR, a Hungarian patriot; at the age of 27 entered the army, and designed to devote himself to the study of chemistry and the administration of his estate; but on the outbreak of the Revolution in 1848 he joined the revolutionists; crushed the Croats at Osora; at the head of a patriot army faced the Austrians under Windischgratz on the western frontier, and despite a temporary repulse, succeeded in asserting the supremacy of the Hungarian cause in a series of victories; Russian assistance accorded to Austria, however, changed the fortune of war; Kossuth resigned, and Görgei became dictator; but, hopeless of success, he immediately negotiated a peace with the Russians; in 1851 he published a vindication of his policy and surrender, and in 1885 was exonerated by his compatriots from the charges of treachery brought against him by Kossuth (1818-1916).

GORGIAS, a celebrated Greek sophist, born in Syracuse, in Sicily; settled in Athens, a swash-buckler of a man, who attached himself to the Eleatics (q.v.), and especially Zeno, in order that by their dialectic "he might demonstrate that nothing exists, or if something exists, that it cannot be known, or if it can be known, that it cannot be communicated"; his work bore, characteristically enough, the title "Of the Non-Existent, or of Nature". He figures in a dialogue by Plato (civ. 483-375 B.C.).

GORGONS, three sisters, Medusa, Euryale, and Stheno, with hissing serpents on their heads instead of hair, of whom Medusa, the only one that was mortal, had the power of turning into stone any one who looked on her. See PERSEUS.

GORHAM, GEORGE CORNELIUS, an English ecclesiastic; being presented to the vicarage of Bramford Speke, N. Devon, was refused institution by Dr. Philipps, the bishop of Exeter, because he was unsound in the matter of baptismal regeneration, upon which he appealed to the Court of Arches, which confirmed the bishop's decision, but the sentence of the court was reversed by the Privy Council, and institution granted (1787-1867).

GORILLA, the largest of the anthropoid apes, native to the equatorial forests of West Africa.

GORKY, MAXIM, Russian author, his real name being Alexei Maximovitch Greshkov. He had little schooling and indulged in various trades, including work on a Volga steamer; he published his first story "Makar Churda" in 1892, and soon achieved success; was imprisoned in 1905 for political activities; served with the Red Cross during the Great War, and for a time after the revolution acted as propagandist for the Bolsheviks; he left Russia in 1926 (1868-).

GÖRLITZ, a fortified town in Prussian Silesia, 52 m. W. of Liegnitz, on the Meuse, where Jacob Boehme (q.v.) lived and died.

GORTSCHAKOFF, MICHAEL, Russian general, brother of the succeeding; served in the war between Russia and Turkey in 1828-1829; commanded in the Danubian Principalities in 1853; distinguished himself in the defence of Sebastopol (1795-1861).

GORTSCHAKOFF, PRINCE, an eminent Russian general; was engaged in Finland in 1809, in the Turkish War in 1810, in the French War, 1812-1814, and the Crimean War (1789-1866).

GOSCHEN, GEORGE JOACHIM, VISCOUNT, statesman, born in London; entered Parliament in the Liberal interest in 1833; served in office under Lord John Russell and Gladstone; was opposed to Home Rule, joined the Liberal-Unionist party and held office under Lord Salisbury as First Lord of the Admiralty; he became Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1886, in which position he brought about a successful conversion of the national debt; in 1900 he retired and was elevated the peerage, but he reappeared in 1906 as champion of free trade in opposition to Joseph Chamberlain (1831-1907).

GOSHEN, a fertile district along a branch of the Nile, in the eastern part of the delta of Lower Egypt; assigned by Pharaoh to the children of Israel when they came to sojourn in the land.

GOSPELS, the name by which the four accounts in the New Testament of the character, life, and teaching of Christ are designated; have been known since as early as the 3rd century, of which the first three are called "Synoptic," because they are summaries of the chief events, and go over the same ground in the history, while the author of the fourth gospel follows lines of his own; the former aim mainly at mere narrative, while the object of the latter is dogmatic, as well as probably to supply deficiencies in the former; moreover, the interest of John's account centres in the person of Christ and that of the others in His gospel; the writers were separately represented as attended, Matthew by a man, Mark by a lion, Luke by an ox, and John by an eagle.

GOSPORT, a fortified port and market-town in Hants, on the W. side of Portsmouth harbour, opposite Portsmouth, with which it is connected by a floating bridge; its industries embrace flourishing iron-works, barracks, the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard, and shipyards. On Haslar creek is the Royal Naval Hospital.

GOSS, SIR JOHN, British organist and composer, choir-master and organist of the Chapel Royal and St. Paul's Cathedral, and the author of several anthems. He was knighted in 1878 (1800-1880).

GOSSIE, SIR EDMUND, poet, essayist, and critic, born in London, the son of the succeeding; author of "History of Nineteenth Century Literature," a collection of lyrics, and a series of monographs, in particular "Life of Gray" (1849-1928).

GOSSIE, PHILIP HENRY, naturalist, born in Worcester, in business in Newfoundland, Canada, and the United States; spent his leisure hours in the study of natural history, chiefly insects; after a visit of two years to Jamaica wrote an account of its birds; compiled several works introductory to the study of animal life, and latterly devoted himself to the study of marine animals (1810-1888).

GOTHA, northern capital of the former duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and situated on the Leine Canal, 6 m. from the northern border of the Thuringian Forest; is picturesquely laid out, and has considerable manufactures; the famous Perthes' geographical publishing-house is at Gotha; Friedenstein Castle, the ducal residence, built in 1648, has a library of 200,000 vols. and 6000 MSS.

GOTHA, a type of German aeroplane used extensively for air raids on England during the Great War.

GOTHA, ALMANACH DE, an annual publication, first issued by Perthes in 1763, which gives genealogies of royal families and members of nobility throughout Europe, in addition to much statistical and general information; there are two editions, one in French, one in German.

GOTHAMITES, American cockneys, New York being called Gotham.

GOTTHARD, ST., the central mountain mass (9850 ft. high) of the Middle Alps and core of the whole Alpine system; it forms a watershed for rivers flowing in four different directions, including the Rhône and the Rhine; the famous town (6696 ft.) from Lake Lucerne to Lake Maggiore forms an excellent carriage-way, has hotels and a hospice at its summit; on the lower slopes is the St. Gotthard railway (opened 1882), with its celebrated tunnel (9½ m.).

GOTHENBURG, the second town of Sweden, at the mouth of the Gotha, 284 m. SW. of Stockholm, is a clean and modern built town, intersected by several canals; it has a splendid harbour, and one of the finest botanical gardens in Europe; its industries include shipbuilding, iron-works, sugar-refining, and fisheries; its licensing system has become famous; all shops for the sale of liquor are in the hands of a company licensed by government; profits beyond a 5 per cent. dividend to the shareholders are handed over to the municipality.

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE, a varied style of architecture distinguished by its high and sharply-pointed arches, and clustered columns, which originated in the Middle Ages and prevailed from the 12th to the 15th centuries, though the term Gothic was originally applied to it as indicating a barbarous degeneracy from the classic, which it superseded.

GOTTLAND: (1) the southernmost of the three old provinces of Sweden; chiefly mountainous, but with many fertile spaces; forest and lake scenery give a charm to the landscape; Gothenburg is the chief town. (2) A Swedish island in the Baltic, 44 m. E. of the mainland, area 1217 sq. m.; forms, with other islands, the province of Gothland or Wisby; agriculture, fishing, and shipping are the main industries; Wisby is the chief town (also called Gottland).

GOTHES, a tribe of Teutons who in formidable numbers invaded the Roman empire from the east and north-east from as early as the third century, and though they were beaten back at the battle of Chalons, eventually broke it up; portions of this great nation, who absorbed lesser tribes, overran France, Spain, Germany, and Italy as Ostrogoths (East Goths) and Visigoths (West Goths), establishing powerful kingdoms that lasted until the 6th and 7th centuries.

GOTTFRIED VON STRASSBURG, a mediæval German poet and one of the famous minnesingers; flourished in Strassburg at the close of the 12th century and beginning of the 13th; his great poem "Tristan und Isolde," completed in 1210, extends to 19,552 lines, and has a grace and freshness suggestive of Chaucer.

GÖTTINGEN, an ancient Hanoverian town, prettily situated in the valley of the Leine, 50 m. S. of Hanover; is chiefly noteworthy on account of its university (1734), with its library of 500,000 vols. and 5000 MSS.; the students exceed 800, and are instructed by 200 professors; there is a flourishing book-trade.

GOTTSCHIED, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a German literary notability, born near Königsberg, professor of Philosophy and Belles-lettres at Leipzig; was throughout his life the literary dictator of Germany; did much to vindicate the rights and protect the purity of the German tongue, as well as to improve the drama, but he wrote and patronised a style of writing that was cold, stiff, and soulless (1700-1766).

GOUGH, SIR HUBERT, British general. Joining the Lancers in 1880, he served in the Tirah expedition of 1897, and in the Boer War. In 1914 he resigned his commission rather than lead his troops against the Ulster volunteers, but on the outbreak of the Great War he went to France in command of the 5th cavalry brigade. In 1916 he was given command of the 5th Army in the battle of the Somme, and was prominent in the German offensive of March, 1918, being recalled on account of the British reverses. He was knighted in 1916 (1870-).

GOUGH, HUGH, VISCOUNT, a distinguished English general, born in Woodstown, co. Limerick; he first saw service at the Cape and in the West Indies; afterwards fought with distinction in the Peninsular war; subsequently, as major-general, he took part in the Indian campaign of 1827, and in 1840 commanded the forces in China; during seven years (1843-1850) he was commander-in-chief of the Indian army, and carried through successfully the Sikh War, which added the Punjab to the British dominions. In 1849 he was created a viscount, and a field-marshal in 1862 (1778-1869).

GOUGH, JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, temperance orator, born in Kent; bred a bookbinder; early a victim to intemperance; took the pledge in 1842, and became an eloquent and powerful advocate of the temperance cause both in England and America (1817-1880).

GOUJON, JEAN, a celebrated French sculptor and architect, born in Paris; he did the reliefs on the Fountain of the Innocents and the facade of the old Louvre; was a Huguenot, but died before the massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572.

GOULD, SIR FRANCIS CARRUTHERS, British artist, especially well-known as a newspaper cartoonist, much of his work for the Westminster Gazette being reproduced in book form (1844-1925).

GOULD, JOHN, eminent ornithologist, born in Lyme Regis, Dorsetshire; his works are entitled, "A Century of Birds from the Himalaya Mountains," "The Birds of Europe," "The Birds of Australia," "The Birds of Asia," "The Birds of Great Britain," and "Humming-Birds," of which last his collection is at the Natural History Museum, London; the volumes in which these works were published were large folios and very expensive, with coloured illustrations of the birds described, the whole done under Mr. Gould's own eye, and in many cases by his own hand (1804-1881).

GOUNOD, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, an eminent French composer, born in Paris; a prize gained at the Paris Conservatoire followed by a government pension enabled him to continue his studies at Rome, where he gave himself chiefly to the composition of religious music; the "Messe Solennelle" was published on his return to Paris; turning his attention to opera he produced "Bapho" in 1851, a popular comic opera; "Le Médecin Malgré Lui" in 1858, and a year later his famous setting of "Faust," which placed him in the front rank of composers; other operas followed, with various masses, anthems, hymns, &c.; his oratorio "Redemption" appeared in 1882 (1818-1893).

GOVAN, a town in Lanarkshire, Scotland, on S. bank of the Clyde, virtually a western suburb of Glasgow; the staple industry is shipbuilding.

GOW, NATHANIEL, youngest son of Neil, won celebrity as a composer of songs and other pieces; his 200 compositions include the popular "Callie Hurth" (1766-1831).

GOW, NEIL, a famous Scottish fiddler, born in Inver, near Dunkeld, of lowly origin; during his long life he enjoyed a wide popularity amongst the Scottish nobility, his especial patron being the Duke of Atholl; Raeburn painted his portrait on several occasions; he composed over a hundred strathspeys, lamenta, &c., giving a fresh impulse and character to Scottish music, but his fame rests mainly on his violin playing (1727-1807).

GOWER, JOHN, an English poet, contemporary and friend of Chaucer, but of an older school; was the author of three works: "Speculum Meditantis," the "Thinker's Mirror," written in French, lost for long, but recovered eventually; "Vox Clamantis," the "Voice of One Crying," written in Latin, an allegorical, moralising poem, cataloguing the vice of the time, and suggested by the Wat Tyler insurrection, 1381; and "Confessio Amantis," "Confession of a Lover," written in English, treating of the course of love, the morals and metaphysics of it, illustrated by a profusion of apposite tales; was appropriately called by Chaucer the "moral Gower"; his tomb is in St. Saviour's, Southwark (1325-1408).

GOWRIE CONSPIRACY, a remarkable and much disputed episode in the reign of James VI. of Scotland; the story goes that Alexander, Master of Ruthven, and his brother, the Earl of Gowrie, enticed the king to come to Gowrie House in Perth on August 5, 1600, for the purpose of murdering or kidnapping him, and that in the scuffle Ruthven and Gowrie perished. Historians have failed to trace any motive incriminating the brothers, while several good reasons have been brought to light why the king might have wished to get rid of them.

GOZO, an island in the Mediterranean which, together with Malta and Comino, forms a British crown colony; lies 4 m. NW. of Malta. Rabato is the chief town.

GOZZI, COUNT CARLO, Italian dramatist, born in Venice; was 39 when his first dramatic piece, "Three Oranges," brought him prominently before the public; he followed up this success with a series of dramas designed to uphold the old methods of Italian dramatic art, and to resist the efforts of Goldoni and Chiari to introduce French models; these plays dealing with wonderful adventures and enchantments in the manner of Eastern tales ("dramatic fairy tales," he called them), enjoyed a wide popularity, and spread to Germany and France. Schiller translated "Turandot" (1720-1806). His older brother, Count Gaspare Gozzi, was an active littérateur; the author of various translations, essays on literature, besides editor of a couple of journals, was press-censor in Venice for a time, and was in his later days engaged in school and university work (1713-1786).

GRACCHUS, CAIUS SEMPRONIUS, Roman tribune and reformer, brother of the succeeding, nine years his junior; devoted himself and his oratory on his brother's death to carry out his measures; was chosen tribune in 123 B.C., and re-elected in 122; his measures of reform were opposed and undone by the Senate, and being declared a public enemy he was driven to bay, his friends rallying round him in arms, when a combat took place in which 8000 fell, upon which Gracchus made his slave put him to death; "overthrown by the Patricians," he is said, "when struck with the fatal stab, to have flung dust toward heaven, and called on the avenging deities; and from this dust," says one, "there was born Marius—not so illustrious for exterminating the Cimbrs as for overturning in Rome the tyranny of the nobles."

GRACCHUS, TIBERIUS SEMPRONIUS, Roman tribune and reformer, eldest son of Cornelia, and brought up by her; proposed, among others, a measure for the more equal distribution of the public land, which he had to battle for against heavy odds three successive times, but carried it the third time; was killed with others of his followers afterwards in a riot, and his body thrown into the Tiber and refused burial, 138 a.c., aged 40.

GRACE, the term in Scripture for that which is the free gift of God, unmerited by man and of eternal benefit to him.

GRACE, DR. WILLIAM GILBERT, celebrated cricketer, born near Bristol; he played first-class cricket for 36 years, principally for Gloucester and England; at a time when wickets were in no way comparable with those of to-day he scored 51,000 runs with an average of 45 per innings, and in addition took 2800 wickets at an average cost of 23 runs. In all he made 121 centuries, which remained a record till beaten by J. B. Hobbs in 1925 (1848-1915).

GRACES, THE, reckoned at one time two in number, but originally they appear to have been regarded as being, what at bottom they are, one, were finally spoken of as three, and called Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia; Thalia, the blooming one, or life in full bloom; Euphrosyne, the cheerful one, or life in the exuberance of joy and sympathy; and Aglaia, the shining one, or life in its effulgence of sunny splendour and glory. They are three sisters, as such always inseparable, and in their inseparability alone are Graces.

GRACIOSA, a princess in a fairy tale, persecuted by her stepmother, and protected by Prince Percinet, her lover.

GRADGRIND, THOMAS, a character in Dickens' "Hard Times," who weighs and measures everything by a hard and fast rule and makes no allowances.

GRANITE, a common igneous rock, which solidified at great depths below the surface, of coarse texture, consisting largely of quartz, feldspar, and micas, the individual crystals of which can be distinguished; granites are known as "acid rocks," i.e. they contain a relatively high percentage of silica; similar rocks with a smaller proportion of silica are known as diorites, syenites, and gabbros.

GRANT, MRS. ANNE, née M'VICAR, authoress, born in Glasgow; took to literature as a means of livelihood after the death of her husband, and produced several volumes descriptive of the Highlands of Scotland and the character of the people: "Letters from the Mountains" enjoyed a wide popularity and first gave to the public some adequate conception of the charm and character of the Highlands (1755-1838).

GRANT, SIR FRANCIS, artist, born in Edinburgh; was educated for the Scottish bar, but took to painting, and became celebrated for his hunting pictures, into which portraits of well-known sportsmen were introduced; also executed portraits of the Queen and Prince Consort on horseback, of Palmerston, Macaulay, and others, and became president of the Royal Academy (1808-1878).

GRANT, JAMES, novelist, born in Edinburgh; joined the army as an ensign at 17, but after a few years resigned and adopted literature as his profession; "The Romance of War" (1846), his first book, was followed by a series of novels, most of which have been translated into Danish, German, and French; he turned Catholic in 1875 (1822-1887).

GRANT, SIR JAMES HOPE, GENERAL, brother of Sir Francis Grant, born in Kilmarnock, Perthshire; first distinguished himself in the Sikh Wars, and took a leading part in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny; in 1859 he commanded the British forces in China, and captured Peking; was created a G.C.B. in 1860 and a general in 1872; he published several works bearing upon the wars in which he had been engaged (1808-1875).

GRANT, ULYSSES SIMPSON, GENERAL, born in Mount Pleasant, Ohio; bred to the military profession, served in Mexico, and held several appointments in the army; retired to civil life in 1864, but on the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the army and fought on the side of the North with such success that in 1864 he was appointed general-in-chief; he was eventually raised to the Presidency in 1868, and re-elected in 1872; on the expiry of this second term he made a tour round the world, and was everywhere received with the distinction he deserved (1822-1885).

GRANTHAM, a market-town in Lincolnshire, on the Witham, 25 m. SW. of Lincoln, with a fine 13th-century church; in the grammar-school Newton was educated, and in 1643 Cromwell won his first victory here; its industries embrace agricultural-implement making and malting; a 30-m. canal connects it with the Trent.

GRANTVILLE, GEORGE LEVESON-GOWER, 2ND EARL, statesman; entered Parliament as a Liberal in 1836, and became a supporter of free trade; in 1846 succeeded to the peerage, and in 1851 became Foreign Minister under Lord Russell; four years later became leader of the Lords; figured in every Liberal cabinet till 1886, usually as Colonial or Foreign Secretary; in 1859 he failed to form a ministry of his own; was a staunch supporter of Gladstone's Home Rule policy (1816-1891).

GRAPHITE, a form of carbon found as a mineral in Central Europe and Ceylon; used for "lead" pencils and as a polishing material.

GRAFFIOLITES, fossils abundant in and restricted to pelmatozoic rocks; they were simple animals somewhat like a quill pen in shape, composed of a horny substance; in some forms the stems are branched; they are the type fossils of the Silurian strata.

GRASMERE, a picturesque lake in Westmorland, near Windermere; about 1 m. long; the village of the same name close by is associated with Wordsworth and Hartley Coleridge.

GRASS SNAKE, a non-venomous reptile common in parts of England and widely distributed throughout Europe; grey-brown in colour, with black spots, it is often mistaken for the viper (g.v.); it feeds on frogs and fish mainly.

GRATIAN, a celebrated canonist of the 12th century born in Chiusi, Tuscany; was a Benedictine monk at Bologna, and compiled the "Decretum Gratiani" between 1139 and 1142.

GRATIANUS, AUGUSTUS, Roman emperor from 375 to 383, eldest son of Valentinian I., born in Pannonia; at 16, in conjunction with his four-year-old brother, Valentinian II., became ruler over the Western Empire, and three years later found himself, by the death of his uncle Valens, head also of the Eastern Empire, a year after which he summoned Theodosius to be his colleague; his reign is noted for the stern repression of the remains of the heathen worship; in 383, while endeavouring to combat the usurper Maximus, he was captured at Lyons and there put to death (350-383).

GRATING, an optical device consisting of a flat piece of glass on which are cut thin lines, at the rate of several thousand to the inch, which gives rise to a spectrum as the result of diffraction; used for the determination of the wave-length of light.

GRATTAN, HENRY, great Irish patriot and orator, born in Dublin, and by birth a Protestant; studied at Trinity College, where he stood high in classics; was called to the Irish bar in 1772, and entered the Irish Parliament three years after, where he distinguished himself as the champion of legislative freedom, by maintaining that the crown had no right to legislate on matters affecting Irish interests, and particularly Irish commercial interests, without consulting the Irish Parliament, and by securing thereby in a measure the legislative independence of Ireland; on the question of Irish Parliamentary reform he quarrelled with his compatriots, and he confined his own efforts to Catholic emancipation; in 1798 he retired from public life, but came forth as an opponent of the Union in 1800, though, on its accomplishment, he represented first Malton in Yorkshire, and then Dublin in the United Parliament, devoting the rest of his life to the political emancipation of his Catholic fellow-subjects; before the rupture referred to fell out, he received a grant of £50,000 from the Irish Parliament; in private as in public life he was a man of irreproachable character, while as an orator he ranks among the foremost of his time (1746-1820).

GRATZ, or GRÄTZ, capital of Styria, in Austria, picturesquely situated on the Mur, 141 m. SW. of Vienna; its many old and interesting buildings include a cathedral (1462), four monasteries, and the Landhaus, an ancient ducal residence; there is a flourishing university, with upwards of 1100 students; its industries embrace iron and steel works, sugar-refining, soap and candle factories.

GRAVELOTTE, a village in Lorraine, 7 m. W. of Metz; was the scene of a German victory over the French in 1870.

GRAVESEND, a thriving river-port and manufacturing town in Kent, on the Thames, opposite Tilbury Fort, 24 m. SE. of London; the new town rises amid picturesque surroundings above the old town; it is the chief pilot station for the river; there is a busy trade in shipbuilding, iron-founding and brewing.

GRAVITATION, name given to the apparent force of attraction of all particles of matter upon one another, and in particular to the force which appears to draw all terrestrial bodies towards the centre of the earth. Newton's Law of Universal Gravitation stated that every piece of matter attracts every other with a force which is proportional to their masses and inversely proportional to the square of the distance between them; this law explains the motion of all the heavenly bodies to a great degree of accuracy; no satisfactory explanation of the cause of the force of gravitation has ever been put forward. According to the ideas of Einstein there is no such thing as "a force of gravity," the behaviour of bodies being explained as due to a curvature of space-time in the neighbourhood of massive bodies; Einstein's theory explained certain irregularities in the orbit of Mercury, which were inexplicable by Newton's law.

GRAY, ASA, a distinguished American botanist, born in Paris, Oneida County, New York; graduated in medicine in 1842; became Fisher professor of Natural History at Harvard, and in 1874 succeeded Agassiz as Regent of the Smithsonian Institution; his writings did much to promote the study of botany in America on a sound scientific basis, and also to forward the theories of Darwin: in conjunction with Dr. Torrey he wrote "The Flora of North America," and by himself various manuals of botany and "Natural Science and Religion" (1810-1888).

GRAY, AULD ROBIN, the title of a ballad by Lady Anne Lindsay, from the name of its hero, a good old man who marries a young girl whose lover is thought to be dead, but who turns up to claim her a month after.

GRAY, JOHN EDWARD, English naturalist, born in Walsall; studied medicine, and at 24 entered the British Museum as an assistant in the Natural History department; in 1840 he became keeper of the Zoological Collections, of which he made a complete catalogue, enriched with most valuable notes; is the author of books and papers to the number of 500, and was an active promoter of scientific societies in London (1800-1875).

GRAY, THOMAS, English poet, born in Cornhill, London, for whom Horace Walpole conceived a warm attachment, which, after a brief rupture, lasted with life; gave himself up to the study of Greek literature, and began to cultivate the muse of poetry; produced in 1747 "Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College," and in 1750 his well-known "Elegy written in a Country Churchyard"; these were followed by the "Pindaric Odes," the "Progress of Poesy," and "The Bard," which was finished in 1757; in 1760 he was presented by the Duke of Grafton with the professorship of Modern History in Cambridge, a sinecure office with £400 a year (1716-1771).

GREAT BARRIER REEF. See BARBIER.

GREAT COMMONER, William Pitt, who became Earl of Chatham (q.v.).

GREAT DUKE, Duke of Wellington (q.v.).

GREAT EASTERN, the name of the largest ship of the day; was designed by Brunel and Scott Russell; laid down at Millwall in 1854, and launched in 1858, having cost £732,000; it did not prove a successful venture; was used for laying the Atlantic cables of 1862 and 1863 and others; and in the end was sold in 1898 for iron.

GREAT ELECTOR, Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg (1620-1688).

GREAT HARRY, a man-of-war built by Henry VII., the first of any size built in England.

GREAT SALT LAKE, in N. of Utah, U.S., stretches upwards of 80 m. along the western base of the Wasatch Mountains, about 4200 ft. above the sea-level; it is from 20 to 32 m. broad, and very shallow; Antelope Island, 18 m. long, is the largest island; the coast is rugged and desolate; its clear waters hold no fish, and the surplus inflow is carried off by evaporation only.

GREAT SLAVE LAKE, 300 m. long and 50 at its greatest breadth; lies within the Canadian N.W. Territory; the Mackenzie River carries its overflow to the Arctic Ocean.

GREAT UNKNOWN, THE, the name applied to the author of "Waverley" and Waverley novels before Scott acknowledged the authorship.

GREATHEAD, JAMES HENRY, British engineer, inventor of the Greathead shield used in the construction of the London tube railways and other tunnels (1844-1890).

GREATHEART, in the "Pilgrim's Progress," the name of Christiana and her family to the Celestial city, a republic of S. Europe occupying most of a peninsula which projects into the Mediterranean between the peninsula of Italy and the mainland of Turkey; it is made up of the N. and S. divisions connected by the narrow and canalised isthmus of Corinth, the Ionian islands in the W., and the Cyclades and Sporades in the E.; it is a mountainous region, and many of the peaks are rich in classic associations, e.g. Olympus, Parnassus, and Helicon; the rivers are of no great size, and the lakes, though numerous, are inconsiderable; in the valleys the soil is fertile and agriculture is actively engaged in, although the methods adopted are still somewhat primitive; but favoured by a delightful climate the vine, olive, and other fruit-trees fourish; currants are the chief article of export, and textiles and cereals the principal imports; milling, dyeing, distilling, and tanning are important industries; various minerals are found, and the marble from Paros is famed as the finest for statue carving; there is a considerable mercantile marine, and a busy shipping trade of a small kind among the islands and along the deeply indented coast, and also valuable coral and sponge fisheries; the bulk of the people belong to the established Greek Church, but in Thessaly and Epirus there are about 25,000 Mohammedans; education is free and compulsory, but is badly administered, and a good deal of illiteracy exists; the story of Greece lies in her past, in the imperishable monuments of her ancient literature and art; by 146 B.C. she had fallen before the growing power of the Romans, and along with the rest of the Byzantine or Eastern empire was overrun by the Turks in A.D. 1453; her renaissance as a modern nation took place between 1821 and 1829, when she threw off the Turkish yoke and reasserted her independence, which she had anew to attempt by arms in 1897, this time with humiliation and defeat, till the other powers of Europe came to the rescue and put a check to the arrogance of the high-handed Turk. The Balkan War of 1913 gave her Macedonia, Epirus, Crete, and other islands, and after the Great War she was ceded nearly all Turkey in Europe. The government was a limited monarchy, but in 1924 a republic was established after further fighting with Turkey.

GREEK or EASTERN CHURCH, that section of the Church which formerly separated from the Roman or Western in 1054, which assumed an independent existence on account of the arrogant claims of the latter, and which acknowledges the authority of only the first seven general councils; it descends from the Nicene doctrine (q.v.), administers the Eucharist in both kinds to the laity, and is zealously conservative of the orthodoxy of the Church.

GREEN FIRE, a combustible of highly inflammable quality, but of uncertain composition, used by the Greeks of the Byzantine Empire against the Saracens; a source of great terror to those who were assailed by it, as it was difficult to extinguish, so difficult that it was said to burn under water.

GREELEY, HORACE, American journalist and politician, born in Amherst, New Hampshire, the son of a poor farmer; was bred a printer, and in 1831 settled in New York; in a few years he started a literary paper, the New Yorker, and shortly afterwards made a more successful venture in the Log Cabin, a political paper, following that up by founding the New York Tribune in 1841, and merging his former papers in the Weekly Tribune; till his death he advocated temperance, anti-slavery, socialistic and protectionist principles in these journals; in 1848 he entered Congress and became a prominent member of the Republican party; he visited Europe, and was chairman of one of the juries of the Great Exhibition; in 1872 he unsuccessfully opposed Grant for the Presidency; in religion he was a Unitarian; his works include "The American Conflict," "Recollections," "Essays," &c. (1811-1872).

GREEN, CHARLES, British aviator, who, in 1821, was the first man to ascend in a hydrogen balloon. Between then and 1852 he made several ascents (1785-1870).

GREEN, JOHN RICHARD, historian, born in Oxford; took orders, and was for a time vicar of St. Philip's, Stepney, contributing articles the while on historical subjects to the Saturday Review; and pursuing his historical studies with a zeal that undermined his health; in 1874 he published his "Short History of the English People," which was speedily adopted in schools, and was accepted at large as one of the ablest summaries of the history of the country; the welcome with which this small work was received induced the author to essay a larger, which he accordingly by-and-by published in 4 volumes, and which he dedicated to "My Masters in the study of English History, Bishop Stubbs and Professor Freeman"; this was followed by "The Making of England" and "The Conquest of England," the latter being published after his decease (1837-1888).

GREEN, THOMAS HILL, philosopher, born in Yorkshire; studied at Balliol College, Oxford; was elected a Fellow and became eventually Whyte's professor of Moral Philosophy; his philosophy had a Kantian root, developed to a certain extent on the lines of Hegel, which, however, he applied less in a speculative than a spiritual interest, though he was not slow, on the ground of it, to assail the evolution theory of Herbert Spencer and G. H. Lewes (1836-1892).

GREENAWAY, KATE, artist and designer, famous for her books for children, distinguished by quaintness and charm; "Birthday Book for Children" (1880) was followed by several others, the originality of which won them immediate popularity; she became a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-colours (1846-1901).

GREENBACKS, a name given to the inconvertible paper currency issued in the United States during the Civil War, so called from the colour of the ink on the back of the notes, bonds, &c.; the name has since been popularly applied to the paper money of the States; the notes were made convertible in 1879.

GREENE, NATHANIEL, a celebrated American general, born in Warwick, Rhode Island; though the son of a Quaker, he promptly took up arms on the outbreak of hostilities with the mother-country, and in 1775, as brigadier-general, headed the force in Rhode Island; his gallant conduct at the battles of Princetown and Brandywine won him promotion, and in 1780 he was advanced to the command of the army of the south; after a temporary reverse from Cornwallis at Guilford Court, he conducted his operations with so much success that, with the crowning victory at Eutaw Springs (1781), he cleared the British from the States; his last days were spent on his estate in Georgia, a gift from government in recognition of his services; next to Washington he was the great hero of the war (1742-1786).

GREENE, ROBERT, dramatist and contemporary of Shakespeare; born in Norwich, came to London at 20 to begin writing plays and pamphlets; among the former were "Orlando Furioso" and "George n' Green" (c. 1660-1692).

GREENLAND, an extensive but imperfectly defined territory lying mostly within the Arctic circle to the N.E. of North America, from which it is separated by Davis Strait and Baffin Bay; the area is variously estimated from 320,000 to 512,000 sq. m.; the land lies submerged beneath a vast plain of ice, pierced here and there by mountain tops, but it is conjectured to consist of one large island-continent enlivened by groups of smaller islands; only on the S. coast, during the meagre summer, is there any appearance of vegetation; there is a great variety of birds, and the animals include the wolf, fox, bear, reindeer, musk ox, and Arctic hare, while whales, seals, and many kinds of fish are found; the inhabitants are chiefly Esquimaux, but there are some Danish settlements, begun in 1721, and the trade is a Danish monopoly; the country was known in early times to the Scandinavians (of whose settlements there are interesting remains), and was rediscovered by John Davis in 1585.

GREENOCK, a flourishing seaport of Renfrewshire, on the Firth of Clyde, 22 m. W. of Glasgow; it stretches some 4 m. along the shore and climbs the hill slopes behind, whence it commands a splendid view of the river and Highlands beyond; the west end is handsomely laid out, and contains some fine buildings, including the Watt Institute, with library of 130,000 vols.; the harbourage is excellent, and favours a large foreign shipping trade; the staple industries are shipbuilding, engineering, spinning, and sugar-refining; coal and iron are the chief exports, and sugar and timber the largest imports.

GREENOUGH, HORATIO, an American sculptor, spent most of his life in Rome and Florence; executed the colossal statue of Washington in front of the Capitol in Washington City, and a group of figures entitled "The Rescue" (1805-1852).

GREENWICH, an important borough, within the county of London, on the Thames, 5 m. S.E. of London Bridge; its active industries embrace engineering, telegraph works, chemical works, &c.;

the Royal Observatory, founded by Charles II. in 1675, occupies a commanding site within the Park; it is from this point that degrees of longitude with us are reckoned.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL, founded in 1694 by Queen Mary after designs by Christopher Wren, was from 1705 till 1869 an asylum for disabled sailors; since then the funds have been distributed in pensions and also utilised for the upkeep of Greenwich Hospital Schools (where 1000 children of seamen receive board and education); since 1873 this hospital has served as the college for the Royal Navy.

GREENWOOD, 1ST BARON OF LLANBISTER (SIR HAMAR), British politician. Born in Canada, he entered the British House of Commons in 1806 as a Liberal. In the Great War he served in France, and in 1819 became under-secretary at the Home Office; in 1820 he became Irish Secretary, and was in that post during the most troubled period of Irish history; he was raised to the peerage in 1829 (1870-).

GREENWOOD, FREDERICK, publicist and journalist; editor of Pall Mall Gazette and St. James's Gazette, author of Life of Napoleon III., Love's Lexicon, and "Dreams"; was instrumental in the purchase by the British Government of the Khedive's shares in the Suez Canal in 1875 (1830-1909).

GREG, WILLIAM RATHBONE, literary and political essayist, born in Manchester. In 1856 became a Commissioner of Customs, and from 1864 till his resignation in 1877 acted as Controller of H.M. Stationery Office; his works embrace "The Creed of Christendom," "Enigmas of Life," "Political Problems," &c., and are marked by vigorous thought couched in a lucid, incisive style; from his evil prognostications was designated Cassandra Greg (1809-1881).

GREGOIRE, HENRI, bishop of Blois, born in Vého, near Lunéville, one of the clerical deputies to the States-General of 1789; attached himself to the Tiers-état, was a member of the National Convention, and a staunch advocate for civil and religious liberty; but refused resolutely to follow "Cocote Gobel," the archbishop of Paris, to renounce the Christian religion and deny his Master (1750-1831). See Carlyle's "French Revolution."

GREGORIAN CALENDAR, the calendar introduced by Pope Gregory XIII. in 1582; it corrected the Julian calendar, which allowed the year 11 minutes 10 seconds too much; it was gradually adopted in all European countries.

GREGORIAN YEAR, the civil year according to the correction of the Gregorian calendar.

GREGORY, the name of 16 Popes: G. I., ST., the Great, Pope from 590 to 604; G. II., ST., Pope from 715 to 731; G. III., Pope from 731 to 741; G. IV., Pope from 827 to 844; G. V., Pope from 998 to 1011; G. VI., Pope from 1045 to 1048; G. VII., Pope from 1073 to 1085; G. VIII., Pope in 1187; G. IX., Pope from 1227 to 1241; G. X., Pope from 1271 to 1276; G. XI., Pope from 1370 to 1378; G. XII., Pope from 1408 to 1415; G. XIII., Pope from 1572 to 1585; G. XIV., Pope from 1590 to 1591; G. XV., Pope from 1621 to 1623; G. XVI., Pope from 1831 to 1846. Of these the following are worthy of note:—

GREGORY I., THE GREAT, and ST., born in Rome, son of a senator; made pretor of Rome; relinquished the office and became a monk; devoted himself to the regulation of church worship (instituting, among other things, the liturgy of the Mass), to the reformation of the monks and clergy, and to the propagation of the faith; saw some fair-haired British youths in the slave-market at Rome one day; on being told they were Angles, he said they should be Angles, and resolved from that day on the conversion of the nation to which they belonged, sending overseas for that purpose a body of monks under Augustine (540-604).

GREGORY II., ST., born at Rome and bred a Benedictine; is celebrated for his zeal in promoting the independence of the Church and the supremacy of the See of Rome, and for his defence of the use of images in worship; d. 731.

GREGORY III., born in Syria; was successor of Gregory II., and carried out the same policy to the territorial aggrandisement of the Holy See at a time when it might have been overborne by secular invasions; d. 741.

GREGORY VII. HILDEBRAND, born in Tuscany; bred up as a monk in a life of severe austerity; he became sensible of the formidable evils tending to the corruption of the clergy, due to their dependence on the Emperor for investiture into their benefices, and he set himself with all his might to denounce the usurpation and prohibit the practice, to the extent of one day excommunicating certain bishops who had submitted to the royal claim and those who had invested them; his conduct roused the Emperor, Henry IV. who went the length of deposing him, upon which the Pope retaliated with a threat of excommunication; it ended in the final submission of Henry at Canossa (q.v.); the terms of submission imposed were intolerable, and Henry broke them, elected a Pope of his own, entered Rome, was crowned by him, and besieged Gregory in San Angelo, from which the latter was delivered by Guileard and enabled to retire to Salerno, where he died, 1085; he was a great man and a good Pope.

GREGORY IX. UGOLINO, born in Campania; had during his pontificate contests with the Emperor Barbarossa, whom he twice over excommunicated; was the personal friend of St. Francis of Assisi, whom he canonised; died at a very advanced age, of 1241.

GREGORY XIII. born in Bologna; was skilled in canon law; distinguished himself in the Council of Trent, and by his zeal against the Protestants; celebrated the Bartholomew Massacre by public thanksgivings in Rome, and reformed the calendar (1562-1585).

GREGORY XVI. born in Belluno; occupied the Papal chair at a time of great civil commotion, and had much to do to stem the revolutionary movements of the time; developed ultramontanist notions, and paved the way for the hierarchical policy of his successor Pío Nono (1785-1846).

GREGORY NAZIANZEN, ST., bishop of Constantinople, born in Cappadocia; studied in Athens, where he became the friend of St. Basil, and held discussions with Julian, afterwards emperor and apostate, who was also studying there; had been bishop of Nazianzus before he was raised by Theodosius to the bishopric of Constantinople, which he held only for a year, at the end of which he retired into solitude; he was the champion of orthodoxy, a defender of the doctrine of the Trinity, and famed for his invectives against Julian; he has left writings that have made his name famous, besides letters, sermons, and poems (328-389). Festival, May 9.

GREGORY OF NYSSA, ST., one of the Fathers of the Greek Church, brother of St. Basil, and bishop of Nyssa, in Cappadocia; he was distinguished for his zeal against the Arians, and was banished from his diocese at the instance of the Emperor Valens, who belonged to that sect, but returned to it after his death; he was an eminent theologian and a valiant defender of orthodoxy, according to Harnack, something like Hegelian lines (332-400). Festival, March 9.

GREGORY OF TOURS, ST., bishop of Tours, French theologian and historian, born in Clermont; was involved a good deal in the political strife of the time, and suffered not a little persecution; was the author of a "History of the Franks," the earliest of French chronicles, entitling him to be regarded as the "Father of Frankish History"; his work contains a great number of valuable documents, though it is written in a barbarous style, and not infrequently evinces a lack of moral sensibility (540-594).

GREGORY TRAMATURGUS, ST., a theologian of the Greek Church, and a convert and disciple of Origen; became bishop of Neo-Cæsarea in Pontus; was present at the Council of Antioch; numerous conversions from paganism are ascribed to him, as well as many miracles. Festival November 12 (210-270).

GREGORY, DAVID, nephew of succeeding, born in Aberdeen; became professor of Mathematics in Edinburgh at the age of 23, and in 1691 was appointed Savilian professor of Astronomy at Oxford; was one of the first publicly to teach the principles of Newton's philosophy (1661-1708).

GREGORY, JAMES, inventor of the reflecting telescope, born in Aberdeen; after a three years' residence in Padua received the appointment of professor of Mathematics in St. Andrews, which he held from 1669 to 1674, when he was elected to the corresponding chair in Edinburgh; author of various mathematical treatises which display a fine originality; he was struck blind whilst working at his telescope (1638-1675).

GREGORY, JAMES, son of succeeding, was his successor in the chair of Medicine at Edinburgh, and wrote "Philosophical and Literary Essays"; co-edited "Gregory's mixture" (1753-1821).

GREGORY, JOHN, grandson of James (1), born in Aberdeen, where he became professor of Medicine in 1755, whence ten years later he was translated to fill the corresponding chair in Edinburgh; his works include, among others, "A Comparative View of the State and Faculties of Man with those of the Animal World" (1724-1778).

GREGORY, SIR RICHARD, British scientist; professor of astronomy at Queen's College, London; at one time assistant to Sir Norman Lockyer; wrote several books on physical geography and science (1864-).

GREGORY, WILLIAM, son of James (2); held successively the chairs of Chemistry in Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Edinburgh; he translated Liebig's "Agricultural Chemistry" and was the first to advance and expound Liebig's theories (1805-1858).

GRENADA, one of the most picturesque of the Windward Islands, in the British West Indies, of volcanic origin; lies about 60 m. N. of Venezuela; the harbour of St. George, the capital, is the most sheltered anchorage in the island group; fruits, cocoa, and coffee are cultivated; it was ceded by France in 1783.

GRENADIERS, soldiers originally attached to most regiments for throwing grenades. They were formed into the First Foot Guards in 1660, and received their present name in 1816.

GRENELL, FRANCIS WALLACE, BARON, Field-Marshal and Sirdar of the Egyptian army, born in London; distinguished himself in Zulu, Transvaal, Egyptian, and Nile expeditions (1886-1892), and commanded forces in Egypt (1897-1898); was presented by the Khedive with a sword of honour on his retirement, in souvenir of the victories of Gilis, Camalzo, and Tokki (1841-1925).

GRENELL, WILFRED THOMASON, British missionary. He studied medicine at the London Hospital, and in 1892 went to Labrador, where he built hospitals and acted as medical missionary. During the Great War he served in an American unit (1865-).

GRENoble, a strongly fortified city of France, capital of the dep. of Isère, on the river Isère, 58 m. SE. of Lyons; there are several fine old churches, and a university with a library of 170,000 vols.; the manufacture of kid gloves is the staple industry.

GRENVILLE, GEORGE, statesman, younger brother of Earl Temple; was called to the bar in 1785, and six years later entered Parliament; held various offices of State, and in 1793 succeeded Bute as Prime Minister; his administration is noted for the prosecution of Wilkes (q.v.), and the passing of the American Stamp Act, a measure which precipitated the American Revolution (1712-1770).

GRENVILLE, SIR RICHARD, a gallant seaman of Queen Elizabeth's time; already a knight, commanded the first expedition sent by Raleigh to colonise Virginia; took part in the defeat of the Armada, and in 1591, while commanding the Revenge in Lord Howard's squadron, engaged single-handed the entire Spanish fleet off the Azores; after a desperate fight of about 18 hours, during which time four of the Spanish vessels were sunk, and upwards of 2000 of their men slain or drowned, he surrendered, was carried wounded on board a Spanish ship, in which he died; the fight is celebrated in Tennyson's noble ballad "The Revenge" (1541-1591).

GRENVILLE, WILLIAM WYNDHAM, LORD, statesman; entered Parliament in 1782; was not a man of brilliant parts, but his integrity and capacity for work raised him to the highest offices of State; in 1789 he was Speaker of the House of Commons, and a year later was raised to the peerage and made Home Secretary under Pitt; in 1791 he was Foreign Secretary; supported Catholic Emancipation and the Abolition of the Slave-trade; he was Premier from 1806 to 1807; later he supported Canning and Earl Grey (1759-1834).

GUILDS, associations of craftsmen or tradesmen in the Middle Ages to watch over and protect the interests of their crafts or trades, and to see that they were honourably as well as economically conducted, each with a body of officials to superintend its affairs; they were associations for mutual help, and of great benefit to the general community, religiously and morally, as well as municipally.

GUILLOTINE, a beheading-machine, an improved type of one invented in Italy, introduced in France at the time of the Revolution by a Dr. Guillotin, and recommended by him to the National Convention, which adopted it; it was anticipated by the Maiden in Scotland, which the Regent Morton employed in 1566.

GUINEA, a name somewhat loosely applied to an extensive tract of territory on the W. coast of Africa, generally recognised as extending from the mouth of the Senegal in the N. to Cape Negro in the S., and is further designated as Lower and Upper Guinea, the boundary line being practically the Equator; the territory is occupied by various colonies of Britain, France, Portugal, Belgium, and the Negro Republic of Liberia.

GUINEGATE, a village in Hainault, SW. of Belgium, where Henry VIII. defeated the French in 1513 in the Battle of the Spurs (q.v.).

GUINEVERE, the wife of King Arthur; the most beautiful of women, conceived a guilty passion for Lancelot, one of Arthur's knights, and married Modred, her husband's nephew. In the king's absence on an expedition against the Romans, on hearing of which he returned, met Modred on the field of battle, slew him, and fell mortally wounded himself, while she escaped to a nunnery. Tennyson gives a different version in his "Idylls."

GUISCARD, ROBERT, Duke of Apulia and Calabria, born in Coutances, Normandy; along with his brothers, sons of Tancred de Hauteville, he, the sixth of twelve, following others of the family, invaded S. Italy; won renown by his great prowess, and in the end the dukedom of Apulia; he engaged in war with the Emperor of the East, but returned to suppress a revolt in his own territory; when Pope Gregory VII. was besieged in San Angelo by Henry IV. of Germany he came to the rescue and the emperor made off (1015-1085).

GUISE, a celebrated French ducal family deriving its title from the town of Guise in Aisne.

GUISE, CHARLES, CARDINAL OF LORRAINE, son of the succeeding, and considered the ablest of the Guise family, was archbishop of Rheims in 1568, and cardinal of Lorraine in 1547; was prominent at the Council of Trent, and in conjunction with his brother fiercely opposed Protestantism (1524-1574).

GUISE, CLAUDE OF LORRAINE, FIRST DUKE OF, fifth son of René II., Duke of Lorraine; distinguished himself in the service of Francis I., who conferred on him the dukedom of Guise; was the grandfather of Mary, Queen of Scots, through his daughter Marie, wife of James V. of Scotland (1498-1550).

GUISE, FRANCIS, SECOND DUKE OF, and son of preceding; rose to the highest eminence as a soldier, winning, besides many others, the great victory of Metz (1552) over the Germans, and capturing Calais from the English in 1556; along with his brother Charles (q.v.) he was virtual ruler of France during the feeble rule of Francis II., and these two set themselves to crush the rise of Protestantism; he was murdered by a Huguenot at the siege of Orleans (1519-1563).

GUISE, HENRY I., THIRD DUKE OF, son of Francis; the murder of his father added fresh zeal to his inborn hatred of the Protestants, and throughout his life he persecuted them with merciless rigour; he was a party to the massacre of St. Bartholomew (1572); his ambitious designs on the crown of France brought about his assassination (1550-1588).

GUISE, HENRY II., FIFTH DUKE OF, grandson of preceding; at 15 he became archbishop of Rheims, but the death of his brother placed him in the dukedom (1640); he opposed Richelieu, was condemned to death, but fled to Flanders; with Mazarin he made a fruitless attempt to seize the kingdom of Naples, and eventually settled in Paris, becoming grand-chamberlain to Louis XIV. (1614-1664).

GUIZOT, FRANÇOIS PIERRE GUILLAUME, a celebrated French historian and statesman, born in Nîmes; his boyhood was spent at Geneva, and in 1805 he came to Paris to study law, but he soon took to writing, and in his twenty-fourth year had published several works and translated Gibbon's great history; in 1812 he was appointed to the chair of History in the Sorbonne; on the second restoration (1814) became Secretary-General of the Ministry of the Interior; the return of Napoleon drove him from office, but on the downfall of the Corsican he received the post of Secretary to the Ministry of Justice; in 1830 he threw in his lot with Louis Philippe, became Minister of Public Instruction, Foreign Minister, and Prime Minister; his political career practically closed with the downfall of Louis Philippe; his voluminous historical works, executed between his terms of office and in his closing years, display wide learning and a great faculty of generalisation; the best known are "The History of the English Revolution" and "The History of Civilisation"; as a statesman he was honest, patriotic, but short-sighted (1787-1874).

GUJARAT, a N. maritime province of the Presidency of Bombay, lying between the Gulfs of Cutch and Cambay; it is a rich alluvial country, and chiefly comprises the native States of Kathiawar, Cutch, and Baroda.

GULF STREAM, the most important of the great ocean currents; it issues by the Strait of Florida from the Gulf of Mexico (whence its name), a vast body of water 50 m. wide, with a temperature of 84° and a speed of 5 m. an hour; flows along the coast of the U.S. as far as Newfoundland, whence it merges into the equatorial drift current, or Gulf Stream drift, which spreads itself in a N.E. direction across the Atlantic, throwing out a branch which skirts the coasts of Spain and Africa, while the main body sweeps N. between the British Isles and Iceland, its influence being perceptible as far as Spitzbergen; it is the genial influence of this great current which gives to Great Britain and Norway their warm and humid atmosphere, and preserves them from experiencing a climate like Labrador and Greenland, a climate to which their latitude would otherwise subject them.

GULL, SIR WILLIAM WITHEY, physician, born in Thorpe-le-Soken; received his medical training at London; and in 1843 became professor of Physiology at the Royal Institution; four years later he was appointed clinical lecturer at Guy's Hospital; in 1871 his attendance on the Prince of Wales brought him a baronetcy; published various lectures and papers on cholera, paralysis, &c. (1816-1890).

GULLIVER, LEMUEL, the hero of Swift's satirical romance, "Gulliver's Travels," which records his adventures among the pigmies of Lilliput, the giants of Brobdingnag, the quacks of Laputa, and the Houyhnhnms.

GULLY, WILLIAM COURT, VISCOUNT SELEY, Speaker of the House of Commons 1895-1905; represented Carlisle from 1886 to 1906; was the son of Dr. Gully of water-cure celebrity (1835-1909).

GUN-COTTON, a powerful explosive formed by the action of nitric and sulphuric acid on cotton or some similar vegetable fibre. It enters into the composition of cordite and blasting gelatine.

GUN-METAL, a tough, close-grained alloy of copper and tin, in the proportion of nine parts of copper to one of tin.

GUNNINGS, two beautiful Irish girls, Maria (1738-1780) and Elizabeth (1734-1790), the elder of whom became Countess of Coventry, and the younger married first the Duke of Hamilton (1752) and afterwards the first Duke of Argyll (1759).

GUNPOWDER, an explosive mixture of saltpetre, sulphur, and carbon; it is said to have been invented by the Chinese, was probably known to the ancient Greeks, and was first used in Europe at the Battle of Crecy (1346); it has been largely superseded by more powerful explosives.

GUNPOWDER PLOT, an attempt on the part of a conspiracy to blow up the Parliament of England on Nov. 5, 1605, on the day of the opening, when it was expected the King, Lords, and Commons would be all assembled; the conspirators were a small section of Roman Catholics dissatisfied with King James's government and were headed by Robert Catesby, the contriver of the plot; the plot was discovered, and Guy Fawkes was arrested as he was proceeding to carry it into execution, while the rest, who fled, were pursued, taken prisoners, and the chief of them put to death. November 5 has since become a day for fireworks and "guy" burning.

GUNTHER, EDMUND, mathematician, born in Hertfordshire; was educated at Oxford for the Church, but his natural bent was towards mathematical science, and in 1819 he became professor of Astronomy in Gresham College, London, a position he held till his death; his "Canon Triangulorum" (1820) was the first table of logarithmic sines and tangents drawn up on Briggs' system; amongst other of his inventions was the surveying chain, a quadrant, Gunter's scale, and he was the first to observe the variations of the compass (1681-1626).

GUNTHER, king of Burgundy and brother of Clémence; his ambition was to wed Brunhilda (q.v.), who could only be won by one who surpassed her in three trials of skill and strength; by the help of Siegfried, who veiled himself in a cloak of darkness, he succeeded not only in winning her hand, but in reducing her to wifely subjection after she was wed.

GUPPY, the name of a part, concealed, but commonplace lawyer's clerk who figures in Dickens' "Bleak House."

GURNEY, JOSEPH JOHN, a Quaker philanthropist and writer, born at Karilham Hall, near Norwich; in 1818 he became a Quaker minister; he energetically co-operated with his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, in bringing about a reform of the prison system, and otherwise spent his life in philanthropic work; his works include "Prison Discipline," 1819, "Religious Peculiarities of the Society of Friends," 1824 (1789-1847).

GUSTAV V., king of Sweden. He married in 1881 Princess Victoria of Baden, and succeeded to the throne in 1907 (1858-).

GUSTAVUS (I.) VASA, or GUSTAVUS ERIKSSON, king of Sweden from 1523 to 1560, born in Lindholm, in Uppland; having conceived the idea of freeing his country from the yoke of Denmark, under which it had fallen in 1519, and his early efforts to infuse a spirit of patriotic rebellion into the Swedes proving ineffectual, he was captured by the Danes; escaping from captivity, he became a wanderer in his own land, working in mines and enduring great privations, but at last, in 1520, the Swedes were goaded to rebellion, and under him eventually drove the Danes from their land in 1523; during his long reign Gustavus gradually brought his at first disorganised empire into a peaceful and united realm (1496-1560).

GUSTAVUS (II.) ADOLPHUS, king of Sweden from 1611 to 1632, born in Stockholm, grandson of preceding and son of Charles IX.; successful territorial wars with Denmark and Russia occupied him during the early years of his reign, and in 1629 he concluded an advantageous truce for six years with Poland; next he espoused the Protestant cause in Germany against the Catholic League; victory crowned his efforts at every step, but in the great battle of Lützen (near Leipzig), whilst facing Wallenstein (q.v.), his most powerful opponent, he fell in the act of rallying his forces, and in the hour of success, not without suspicion of having been assassinated; he ranks amongst the greatest of champions (1594-1632).

GUSTAVUS III., king of Sweden from 1771 to 1792; succeeded his father Adolphus Frederick; he found himself early at conflict with his nobles, and in 1772, supported by popular feeling, imposed a new constitution on the country, greatly diminishing their power; Gustavus was an enlightened ruler, but somewhat alienated his people from him by his extravagance and fondness for French modes of life; in 1788 he became embroiled in a purposeless war with Russia; he was assassinated when about to take up arms in behalf of the Bourbon cause against the French Republicans (1746-1792).

GUSTAVUS IV., king of Sweden from 1792 to 1809, son of preceding; his incompetency and stubbornness made him an ill ruler; territory was lost to the French, and Finland to Russia, while an attack on Norway proved a failure; popular indignation rose to a height in 1809; he was deposed, and the crown given to his uncle, Charles XIII.; after this he lived on the Continent (1778-1837).

GUTENBERG, JOHANNES or HENNIE, also called Gensfleisch, claimed by the Germans to have been the inventor of the art of printing with movable types, born in Mainz; for some time lived in Strasbourg as a pollisher of precious stones, mirrors, &c., he set up his first printing-press at Mainz about 1450 (1400-1468).

GUTHRIE, ST., a celebrated hermit of Crowland, of noble lineage; figured in religious pictures as scourging demons; d. about 1714.

GUTHRIE, THOMAS, a Scottish clergyman, distinguished as a pulpit orator and a philanthropist, born in Brechin; was minister at Arbikie, near Arbroath, and then in Edinburgh; left the Established Church at the Disruption, and became minister of St. John's; traversed the country (1845-1846) to raise a fund to provide manes for the Disruption ministers, and realised £116,000 for the object; came forward as an advocate for ragged schools, and founded one in Edinburgh; he was a warm-hearted man as well as an eloquent, who could both move his audience to tears and rouse it to enthusiasm (1809-1878).

GUTHRIE, THOMAS ANSTEE, author; under the pen-name of F. Anstey wrote "Vice Versa," "The Giant's Hobe," and "The Bram Bottle"; a contributor to Punch (1856-).

GUTTA-FERROHA, the juice of a tree found in the Malay Archipelago, closely related to rubber and used for similar purposes.

GUY, THOMAS, founder of Guy's Hospital, London, born in Southwark; he started in business as a bookseller in 1668, and after the importation of English Bibles from Holland was stopped he obtained the privilege of printing Bibles for Oxford University; lucky speculation in South Sea stock, combined with his printing business, enabled him to amass an immense fortune, which he devoted largely to charitable purposes; from 1695 to 1707 he sat in Parliament (1646-1724).

GUY OF WARWICK, a hero of English romance of the 13th century, who won the hand of the daughter of the Earl of Warwick by a succession of astonishing feats of valour, but repented of the slaughter he had made, and went a pilgrimage to the Holy Land; returned to his wife disguised as a pauper; relapsed into a hermit's ways; when about to die sent a ring to her, upon which she came and interred him; she died 15 days after him, and was buried by his side.

GUYN, SIR, a knight in Spenser's "Faerie Queene," the impersonation of temperance and self-control; he subdued the sorceress Acrasia (s.e. Intemperance), and was the destroyer of her "House of Bliss."

GWALIOR, a native State of Central India, under British protection since 1803; governed by the Maharajah Sindhis; area, 29,007 sq. m.; consists of scattered districts in the basins of the Juma and Nerbudda; opium is the chief export. Gwalior, the capital, is situated 65 m. S. of Agra; the citadel is very strongly posted on a steep rocky base 840 ft. high.

GWYNN, NELL, a "pretty, witty" actress of Drury Lane, who became mistress of Charles II., whose son by her was created Duke of St. Albans; the king was very fond of her and took special thought of her when he was dying (1650-1687).

GYGES, a young shepherd of Lydia, who, according to classic legend, possessed a magic ring of gold by which he could render himself invisible; he repaired to the Court of Candaules, whose first minister he became, whose chamber he entered invisibly, and whom he put to death to reign in his stead.

GYMNOSOPHISTS, a set of contemplative philosophers among the Hindus who practised an extreme asceticism and went about almost naked.

GYMNOSPERMS, name given to a class of plants which includes the evergreen conifers, s.e. pines and firs.

GYMNOTUS, an electric eel of South America, found in the fresh waters of Brazil and Guiana.

GYPSUM, a soft mineral composed of sulphate of lime; it is often deposited from solution in the drying up of salt lakes, since sulphate of lime is more soluble in salt than in pure water; when heated, the water of crystallisation is driven off, leaving a white powder known as plaster of Paris, which sets to a hard mass when mixed with water.

GYRO-COMPASS, a form of compass used on ships, based upon the principle that a spinning gyroscope keeps its axis of rotation steadily pointing in a fixed direction, independent of the motion of the ship.

H

HAAPFIZ. See HAFFIZ.

HAARON VII., king of Norway. He married Princess Maud, a daughter of King Edward VII. of England, in 1896, and succeeded to the throne on the dissolution of the union with Sweden in 1905 (1872-).

HAARLEM, a handsome town in the province of N. Holland on the Spaarne, 4 m. from the sea, and 12 m. W. of Amsterdam; has a fine 16th-century church with a famous organ (8000 pipes), linen and other factories, &c., and is noted for its tulip-gardens and trade in flower-bulbs: it is intersected by several canals as well as the rivers; there existed at one time a lagoon of the Zuider Zee called Haarlem Lake, which stretched southward as far as Leyden, between Amsterdam and Haarlem; but destructive inundations, caused by the tidal advance in 1856, compelled the Government to set about draining it, and this difficult engineering operation was successfully carried through by an English company during 1859-1862.

HABAKKUK, a book of the Old Testament by a Levite, whose name it bears, and who appears to have flourished in the 7th century B.C., containing a prophecy which belongs, both in substance and form, to the classic period of Hebrew literature, and is written in a style which has been described, as being "for grandeur and sublimity of conception, for gorgeousness of imagery, and for melody of language, among the foremost productions of that literature." The spirit of it is one: faith, namely, in the righteous ways of the Lord; but the burden is twofold: to announce the judgment of God on the land for the violence and wrong that prevailed in it, as about to be executed on it by a power still more violent and unjust in its ways; and to comfort the generation of the righteous with the assurance of a time when this very rod of God's wrath shall in the pride of its power be broken in pieces, and the Lord be revealed as seated in His Holy Temple.

HABBERTON, JOHN, American writer; author of many popular stories, in which "Helen's Babies" achieved the greatest success (1842-1921).

HABRAS CORPUS, an Act of Parliament passed in the reign of Charles II. to ensure the protection of one accused of a crime prior to conviction in an open court of justice.

HABBINGTON, THOMAS, a Worcester gentleman of fortune, involved at one time in a conspiracy to release Mary, Queen of Scots, from prison, and convicted at another of concealing some of the agents in the Gunpowder Plot (1560-1647).

HABBINGTON, WILLIAM, poet and historian, son of the preceding; a devoted Catholic; author of "Castara," a collection of exquisite lyrics in homage to his wife, and in celebration of her charms and virtues (1605-1654).

W. of Ipswich; its cloth trade dates back to 1391; Guthrum, the Danish king, died here in 890, Dr. Rowland Taylor suffered martyrdom in 1555. Also a small parish of Essex, near the N. shore of the Thames estuary, 37 m. E. of London, where in 1892 the Salvation Army planted a farm-colony.

HADLEY, JAMES, an American Greek scholar, and one of the American committee on the revision of the New Testament (1821-1872).

HADLEY, JOHN, natural philosopher; constructed an improved reflecting telescope, and invented a quadrant which bears his name, though the honour of the invention has been assigned to others, Newton included (1682-1744).

HADRAMAUT, a dry and healthy plateau in Arabia, extending along the coast from Aden to Cape Ras-al-Hadd, nominally a dependency of Turkey.

HADRIAN (PUBLIUS SEPTIMIUS HADRIANUS), Roman emperor, born in Rome; distinguished himself under Trajan, his kinsman; was governor of Syria, and was proclaimed emperor by the army on Trajan's death in A.D. 117; had troubles both at home and abroad on his accession, but these settled, he devoted the last 18 years of his reign chiefly to the administration of affairs throughout the empire; visited Gaul in 120, whence he passed over to Britain, where he built the great wall from the Tyne to the Solway; he was a Greek scholar, had a knowledge of Greek literature, encouraged industry, literature, and the arts, as well as reformed the laws (76-138).

HAECKEL, ERNST HEINRICH, a German biologist, born in Potsdam; carried through his medical studies at Berlin and Vienna; early evinced an enthusiasm for zoology, and, after working for some time at Naples and Messina, in 1855 became professor of Zoology at Jena; here he spent a life of unceasing industry, varied only by expeditions to Arabia, India, Ceylon, and different parts of Europe in the prosecution of his scientific theories; he was the first among German scientists to embrace and apply the evolutionary theories of Darwin, and along these lines he produced several works of first-rate importance in biology; his great works on calcareous sponges, on jelly-fishes, and corals are enriched by elaborate plates of outstanding value; he made important contributions to the Challenger reports, and was among the first to outline the genealogical tree of animal life; his name is associated with far-reaching speculations on heredity, sexual selection, and various problems of embryology; "The Natural History of Creation," "Treatise on Morphology," "The Evolution of Man," are amongst his more popular works (1884-1919).

HEMOGLOBIN, the substance giving the red colour to the blood of vertebrates, consisting of proteins and iron compounds; its function in the blood is oxygen capture.

HAFIZ, his real name Mohammed Shams-ed-Din, the great lyric poet of Persia, born in Shiraz, where he spent his life; he has been called the Anacreon of Persia; his poetry is of a sensuous character, though the images he employs are interpreted by some in a supersensuous or mystical sense; Goethe composed a series of lyrics in imitation; the name Hafiz denotes a Mohammedan who knows the Koran and the Hadith by heart (1320-1391).

HAFNIUM, a chemical element closely related to zirconium, discovered by Coster and Ilovey in 1923; it was found to fill a gap in the periodic table (q.v.) corresponding to an element of atomic number 72.

HAGAR, Sarah's maid, of Egyptian birth, who became by Abraham the mother of Ishmael and of the Ishmaelites.

HAGEDORN, FRIEDRICH VON, a German poet, born in Hamburg; was secretary to the English factory there; wrote fables, tales, and moral poems (1708-1754).

HAGENAU, a town of Alsace-Lorraine, situated in the Hagenau Forest, on the Moder, 21 m. NE. of Strasbourg; has two quaint old churches of the 12th and the 13th centuries respectively; hops and wine are the chief articles of commerce.

HAGENBACH, KARL, a German theologian, born in Basel, and professor there; was a disciple of Schleiermacher; wrote a church history; is best known by his "Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte," or "History of Dogmas" (1801-1874).

HAGGADAH, a system of professedly traditional, mostly fanciful, amplifications of the historical and didactic, as distinct from the legal, portions of Jewish scripture; is a reconstructing and re-modelling of both history and dogma, for the Jews seem to have thought, though they were bound to the letter of the Law, that any amount of licence was allowed them in the treatment of history and dogma.

HAGGAI, one of the Hebrew prophets of the Restoration (of Jerusalem and the Temple) after the Captivity, who, it would appear, had returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel and Joshua. Signs of the divine displeasure having appeared on account of the laggard spirit in which the Restoration was prosecuted by the people, this prophet was inspired to lift up his protest and rouse their patriotism, with the result that his appeal took instant effect, for in four years the work was finished and the Temple dedicated to the worship of Jehovah, as of old, in 516 B.C.; his book is a record of the prophecies he delivered in that connection, and the style, though prosaic, is pure and clear.

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER, born in Norfolk; after service in a civic capacity in Natal, and in partly civil and partly military service in the Transvaal, adopted the profession of literature; first rose into popularity as author in 1885 by the publication of "King Solomon's Mines," the promise of which was sustained in a measure by a series of subsequent novels beginning with "She" in 1887 (1886-1925).

HAGGIS, a Scottish dish, composed of the chopped lungs, heart, and liver of a sheep mixed with suet and oatmeal, seasoned with onions, pepper, salt, &c., and boiled in a sheep's stomach.

HAGIOGRAPHIA, the third division of the Jewish canon of scripture, which included the books of Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Ruth, Lamentations, Esther, Daniel, Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah.

HAGUE, THE, the capital of the Netherlands, seat of the Court and of the Government, 15 m. NW. of Rotterdam and 2 m. from the North Sea; is handsomely laid out, in spacious squares and broad streets, with stately buildings, statues, and winding canals beautifully fringed with lindens and spanned by many bridges; has a fine picture-gallery, a royal library (200,000 vols.), archives rich in historical documents of rare value, an ancient castle, palace, and a Gothic church of the 14th century; industries embrace cannon-foundries, copper and lead smelting, printing, &c.; it is connected by tramway with Scheveningen, a fashionable watering-place on the coast. It became famous for its conventions and peace conferences in the early years of this century; in 1899 the International Court of Arbitration was established there, and the town has also a magnificent Palace of Peace.

HAHNEMANN, SAMUEL, a German physician, the founder of Homeopathy (q.v.), born in Meissen; established himself in practice in Dresden on orthodox lines and enjoyed a high reputation, but retired to revise the whole system of medicine in view of which he had begun to study physiology, and by various researches and experiments came to the conclusion that the true principle of the healing art was similia similibus curantur, "like things are cured by like," which he announced as such to the medical world in 1796, and on which he proceeded to practise first in Leipzig and finally in Paris, where he died (1755-1843).

HAIDEE, a beautiful Greek girl in Byron's "Don Juan," who, falling in love with the hero and losing him, came to a tragic end.

HAJDUK, or HAJDUK (i.e. cowherd), a name bestowed on a body of irregular infantry in Hungary who kept up a guerrilla warfare in the 16th century against the Turks; in 1806 a stretch of territory on the left bank of the Theiss was conferred upon them, together with a measure of local government, and certain other privileges; but in 1876 their territory was incorporated in the county of Hajdu; the name was in later times applied to the Hungarian infantry and to noblemen's retainers.

HAIG, 1ST EARL OF BERNERSYDE (Sir Douglas Haig), British general. Taking a commission in the 7th Hussars in 1885, he served in the Sudan and in the Boer War, where he was chief-of-staff to French. In 1914 he went to France with the British Expeditionary Force in command of the 1st Army Corps, and in January, 1915, he was given command of the 1st Army. He succeeded French in command of the British forces on the western front in December, 1915, working first with Joffre, then with Nivelle, and in 1918, when the German offensive was launched, he was nearly retired owing to differences with the Government. Foch was placed as supreme general of the Allied forces, and with Haig giving him loyal support the war was ended in the autumn with an attack on the Hindenburg line. He was raised to the peerage in 1919, founded the British Legion (q.v.), and devoted the rest of his life to the welfare of ex-servicemen (1861-1928).

HAILES, LORD, (Sir David Dalrymple) Scottish judge and antiquary, born in Edinburgh; was called to the Scottish bar in 1748, and raised to the bench in 1768; ten years later he became a Justiciary lord; he devoted his vacations to literary pursuits, and a series of valuable historical works came from his pen, which include "Annals of Scotland from Malcolm III. to Robert I." and "Annals of Scotland from Robert I. to the Accession of the House of Stuart." "A Discourse on the Gowrie Conspiracy," &c. (1726-1792).

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE, lies 2 m. SE. of Hertford; was founded in 1806 by the East India Company as a training institution for their cadets, and was in use till 1856, when the company ceased to exist; in 1862 it was converted into a public school.

HAROLD I., king of England from 1035 to 1040, younger son of Cnut; the kingdom was practically divided between him and his brother Hardicanute (q.v.); but, the latter remaining in Denmark to protect his possessions there, England passed into Harold's hands.

HAROLD II., the last of the Saxon kings of England, held the crown for a few months in 1066, was the second son of the great Earl Godwin (q.v.); in 1053 he succeeded his father in the earldom of the West Saxons, and during the later years of Edward's feeble rule was virtual administrator of the kingdom; on his accession to the throne his title was immediately challenged by his brother Godwin and William, Duke of Normandy; having crushed his brother's invasion at Stamford Bridge, he immediately hurried S. to meet the forces of William at Hastings; Norman strategy won the day, and Harold fell in the battle pierced through the eye by an arrow; historians unite in ascribing to him every kindly quality—a noble presence, sagacity, and a brave yet gentle nature (1022-1066).

HAROLD I. OF NORWAY, surnamed Harfagra (fair-haired); by him the petty kingdoms of Norway were all conquered and knit into one compact realm; the story goes that he undertook this work to win the hand of his lady-love, and that he swore an oath neither to cut nor comb his hair till his task was done; d. 933.

HAROLD III. OF NORWAY, surnamed Hardraade (hard in counsel); chief of the Varangian guards at Byzantium; succeeded to crown of Norway at death of Magnus; fell at Stamford Bridge, 1066.

HAROLD, BLUE-TOOTH, first Christian king of Denmark, accepting baptism to placate the Emperor Otto (936-986).

HAROUN AL-RASCHID ("Aaron the Orthodox or Just"), the most renowned of the Abbasid caliphs; succeeded to the caliphate in 786 on the death of his elder brother, El Hadi, and had for grand-vizier the Barmecide Yahya, to whom with his four sons he committed the administration of affairs, he the while making his court a centre of attraction to wise men, scholars, and artists, so that under him Bagdad became the capital of the civilised world; his glory was tarnished by one foul blot towards the end of his reign, and that was the massacre out of jealousy of the Barmecide family, members of which had contributed so much to his fame, an act which he had soon occasion to repent, for it was followed by an insurrection which cost him his life; the halo that invests his memory otherwise was, however, more fabulous than real, largely due to the picture of him, presented by the "Arabian Nights"; history shows him at his best to have been avaricious, resentful, and cruel (c. 764-809).

HARPIES, fabulous ravenous creatures, living in fith and defiling everything they touched, with the head and breast of a woman, the wings and claws of a bird, and a face pale with hunger, the personification of whirlwinds and storms, conceived of as merely ravening, wasting powers.

HEAVEN, in Christian theology the place of the immediate Divine presence, where God manifests Himself without veil, and His saints enjoy that presence and know as they are known. In Scripture it denotes, (1) the atmosphere, (2) the starry region, (3) a state of bliss, (4) as defined, the divine presence, and (5) God Himself.

HEAVE-OFFERING, among the Jews, an offering for the support of divine service, so called as, when offered, lifted up in presence of the people.

HEAVISIDE LAYER, the upper part of the atmosphere which is supposed to be ionised, making it opaque to wireless waves which are reflected back to the earth.

HEBEL, FRIEDRICH, lyricist and dramatist, born in Wesselsburen, Dithmarsh; settled in Vienna in 1846; "Die Nibelungen" is his best play, others are "Judith," "Maria Magdalena," &c.; his dramas are vigorous and original, but ill-proportioned, and in the passions they depict abnormal; his works are collected in 12 vols (1813-1863).

HEBE, goddess of eternal youth, daughter of Zeus and Hera; was the cup-bearer of the gods; was superseded by Ganymedes, and became the wife of Hercules after his admission among the Immortals.

HEBER, REGINALD, bishop of Calcutta, born in Cheshire, author of a prize poem entitled "Palestine" and a volume of "Hymns," several of them famous, as "From Greenland's Icy Mountains"; died at his post in Trichinopoly; left a narrative of a "Journey through India" (1783-1826).

HEBERT, JACQUES RENÉ, commonly called Père Duchesne, as editor of a journal of that name, a violent revolutionary organ; took part in the September Massacres; brutally insulted the queen at her trial, to the disgust of Robespierre; was arrested by his colleagues, whom he dared to oppose, and guillotined (1756-1794).

HEBREW, a Semitic language, the ancient language of the Jews, and that in which the Old Testament is written; its words, as indeed are others of the same stock, are derived from tri-literal roots, and its verbs have no present tense, only a past and a future, convertible, moreover, into one another.

HEBREW POETRY is of two kinds, either lyric or gnomic, i.e. subjectively emotional or sentimentously didactic, the former belonging to the active or stirring, and the latter to the reflective or quiet periods of Hebrew history, and whether expressed in lyric or gnomic rhaps in the conscience and terminates in action; for Hebrew thought needs to go no higher, since therein it finds and affirms God; and it seeks to go no farther, for therein it compasses all being, and requires no epic and no drama to work out its destiny. However individualistic in its features, as working through the conscience, it yet relates itself to the whole moral world, and however it may express itself, it beats in accord with the pulse of eternity. The lyric expression of the Hebrew temper we find in the Psalms and the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and the gnomic in the books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes; while the book of Job, which is only dramatic in form, is partly lyric and partly dramatic.

HEBREW PROPHECY had throughout regard for the Jews as a nation and to see that it fulfilled its destiny as such in the world. This purpose we see carried out by five steps or stages. It taught, first, by the Nefilim (g.e.), that the nation must regard itself as one nation; secondly, by Elijah, that it must have Jehovah alone for its God; thirdly, by Amos, that as a nation it was not necessarily God's chosen; fourthly, by Isaiah, that it existed for the preservation of a holy seed; and finally, that it ceased to exist when it was felt that religion primarily concerned the individual and was wholly an affair of the conscience. Thus does Hebrew prophecy terminate when it leads up to Christianity, the first requirement of which is a regeneration of the heart (John iii. 3), and the great promise of which is the outpouring of a spirit that "will guide into all truth" (John xvi. 13).

HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE, an epistle of the New Testament of uncertain authorship addressed to Christians of Jewish descent, who were strongly tempted, by the persecution they were subjected to at the hands of their Jewish brethren, to renounce the cross of Christ, which it was feared they would too readily do, and so to their own ruin crucify the Son of God afresh, there being only this alternative for them, either crucifixion with Christ or crucifixion of Christ, and death of all their hopes founded on Him.

HEBRIDES, or WESTERN ISLANDS, a general name for the islands on the west coast of Scotland (save the islands of the Firth of Clyde), about 500 in number, of which 100 are inhabited; they belong to the counties of Ross, Inverness, and Argyll, and are divided by the Little Minch and the Minch into the Outer Hebrides, of which the chief are Lewis, Harris, North and South Uist, Benbecula, and Barra; and the Inner Hebrides, including Skye, Rum, Mull, Iona, Jassa, and Colonsay; they have wild and rocky coasts, but are picturesque and verdurous, and are much frequented by tourists; the climate is mild and moist; cattle and sheep rearing and fishing are the chief industries; chief town, Stornoway, in Lewis.

HEBRON, an ancient town and city of refuge, originally called Kirjath-arba, i.e. four cities, only 20 m. S. of Jerusalem; it is a poor place now, but still abounds in orchards and vineyards.

HECATÆUS OF MILETUS, styled the "logographer," who flourished about 500 a.c.; visited many countries, and wrote two books, "The Tour of the World" and "Genealogies of Histories," the former containing descriptions of the places he visited, and the latter an account of the poetical fables and traditions of the Greeks.

HECATE, in the Greek mythology a mysterious divinity of the Titan brood and held in honour by all the gods, identified with Phoebe in heaven, Artemis on earth, and Persephone in Hades, invested with authority in all three regions, and thus figured with three bodies or heads; came to be regarded exclusively as an infernal deity, having under her command and at her beck all manner of demons and phantoms spirits.

HECKER, FRIEDRICH KARL FRANZ, a German revolutionary, born in Lichtersheim, Baden; practised as an advocate in Mannheim, and in 1842 became an active democrat and Socialist; frustrated in an attempt during the '48 Revolution to create a republican assembly, he headed a revolutionary attack upon Baden, was defeated, and subsequently settled in the United States, where he took to farming; took part in the Civil War at the head of a regiment of Germans, and became a commander of a brigade (1811-1881).

HEHJAZ, with Najd a kingdom of Central Arabia, stretching from the Persian Gulf to the Red Sea. For the most part the inhabitants are nomadic Arabs, and the country is of vital importance to the Eastern world as it contains the Holy City of Mecca. A stronghold of the Wahabites in the 18th century, it fell under the Turkish yoke till 1918, when it declared some measure of independence. In 1925 the kingdom greatly extended its borders.

HEGONISM, the doctrine of the Cyrenaics that pleasure is the end of life and the measure of virtue, or the eumaimonism.

HEEM, JAN DAVIDSZ VAN, a famous Dutch painter, born in Utrecht; had a prosperous and uneventful career in Antwerp, where in 1635 he became a member of the Guild of Painters; he is considered the greatest of the "still life" painters; his pictures, masterpieces of colouring and chiaroscuro, have a great monetary value, and are to be found in the famous galleries of Amsterdam, Vienna, Berlin, Leningrad, &c. (1606-1684).

HEEREN, LUDWIG, a German historian; professor of History at Göttingen; wrote on ancient and modern history, especially the ancient and its antiquities; eminent in both (1760-1842).

HEFEL, KARL JOSEPH VON, a Catholic Church historian, born in Unterkothen, in Württemberg; in 1840 became professor of Church History and Christian Archaeology in the Catholic Theological Faculty in Tübingen University, and in 1869 Bishop of Bottenburg; was for some time seriously opposed to the doctrine of the Papal infallibility, but subsequently acquiesced, putting, however, his own construction on it; his best-known works are the "History of the Christian Councils" and "Contributions to Church History" (1809-1898).

HEGEL, GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH, German philosopher, the greatest of all, born in Stuttgart; studied first at Tübingen, with a view to theology; as a student attracted no particular attention, was outstripped by Schelling; did domestic tutoring for a time; qualified at Jena for an academic career; adhered to and collaborated with Schelling in philosophy; first announced himself in 1807 by his work,

"Phenomenology of the Spirit"; became rector of the Academy at Nürnberg, where in 1812-1816 he composed his "Logic"; was in 1816 appointed professor of Philosophy at Heidelberg, whence he was removed to Berlin in 1818, where, his philosophy being now matured, he began to apply it with intense earnestness to every subject of human interest; he was the last of a line of thinkers beginning with Kant, with whom, however, he affiliated directly, and in his idealism philosophy first reached the goal to which it was till then with hesitating steps only stretching forward; he wrote all 22 goodly sized volumes, and his system may be grouped under three heads, the "Science of Logic," the "Philosophy of Nature," and the "Philosophy of Spirit" (1770-1831).

HEGELIANISM, the philosophy of Hegel, which resolves being into thought, and thought into the unity of the logical moments of simple apprehension, judgment, and reason, all purely spiritual acts, whereby being in itself, or seyn, becomes other than itself, or daseyn, and returns into itself, or für sich seyn, the universal being first by separating from itself particularised, and then by return into itself individualised, the whole being what Hegel characterises as Der Prozess des Geistes, "The Process of the Spirit." Something like this is what Dr. Stirling calls "The Secret of Hegel," and an open secret it is, for he finds it pervading the whole system; "open where you will in Hegel," he says, "you find him always engaged in saying pretty well the same thing"; always identically by otherness passing into selfness, or making that for itself which is at first in itself;—a philosophy which is anticipated by the doctrine of St. Paul, which represents God as the One from whom are all things as Father, and through whom are all things as Son, and to whom are all things as Spirit, the One who is thus All; it is also involved in the doctrine of Christ when He says God is Spirit, or the Living One who lives, and manifests Himself in life, for Himself, from Himself, and through Himself, who, so to say, thus concretises Himself throughout the universe.

HEGESIAS, a Cyrenaic philosopher, who held that life was full of evils, that it was in vain to seek after pleasure, and that all a wise man could do was to fortify himself as best he could against pain.

HEGESIPPUS, a Church historian of the 2nd century, a convert from Judaism; called "the father of Church history"; only fragments of his "Memorials of Ecclesiastical Affairs" remain, preserved by Eusebius and Photius.

HEIDELBERG, a celebrated German city, in Baden, situated amid beautiful surroundings, on the Neckar, 13 m. S.E. of Mannheim; has many interesting buildings, including ruins of a splendid 13th-century castle, but is chiefly celebrated for its flourishing university, whose professoriate has included many of the most distinguished German scholars; it was long the centre of Calvinism; its chief trade is in books, tobacco, wine, and beer.

HEIDELBERG MAN, an early sub-man, remains of which were found in a sandpit at Mauer on a tributary of the Rhine in 1907; the remains included the lower jaw and teeth and were found among the bones of animals living in the early pleistocene age; it is now considered to be of later date than the Pittdown man (q.v.), though earlier than the Neanderthal.

HEIN, or HEYN, PETER PETERSEN, a famous Dutch admiral, born in Delftaven; from being a cabin-boy rose to be commander of the Dutch fleet; off the east coast of S. America he twice defeated the Spanish fleet, securing an immense booty, and in 1628 captured a flotilla of Spanish galleons with silver and jewels equal to 16,000,000 Dutch guilders; fell in an action off Dunkirk (1570-1629).

wearied assailant of Rationalism in its treatment of the Scriptures and the old orthodox faith; his principal works bear on Old Testament literature, such as its Christology and the Psalms, as well as on the New, such as St. John's Gospel and the Apocalypse (1802-1860).

HENLEY, WILLIAM ERNEST, poet and critic, author of a "Book of Verses" and "Song of the Sword," in which he reveals superior powers as a poet, and of a volume entitled "Views and Reviews," in which he evinces discriminative criticism of the highest order; edited, with T. F. Henderson, the "Centenary Edition of the Poetry of Burns," accompanying it with a "Life of the Poet," and a characterisation somewhat damping to the prevailing enthusiasm in connection with the poet; wrote several plays in collaboration with Robert Louis Stevenson (1849-1903).

HENLEY-ON-THAMES, a borough of Oxfordshire, on the Thames, near the Chiltern Hills, 36 m. W. of London; the river is spanned here by a fine five-arch bridge, and the annual amateur regatta is a noted social event; malting and brewing are the chief industries.

HENOTHEISM, a polytheism which assigns to one god of the pantheon superiority over the rest.

HENRIETTA MARIA, wife of Charles I., born at the Louvre; daughter of Henry IV. of France and of Marie de Medicis; a beautiful and able woman, much beloved, and deservedly so, by her husband, but from her bigotry as a Roman Catholic disliked and distrusted by the nation, not without good reason; by her imprudent conduct she embroiled matters more seriously than they were; menaced with impeachment by the Commons, had to flee the country; returned, in time, with a supply of money and ammunition "purchased by crown jewels," but in 1644 was obliged to seek refuge again in France; revisited the country for a short time after the Restoration, and died near Paris at her retreat there (1609-1669).

HENRIETTA MARIA, daughter of Charles I., and wife of the Duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIV., born in Exeter; she had an itch for political intrigue like her mother, and was successful in persuading her brother, Charles II., into league with France by signing the treaty of Dover; on her return to France she died suddenly, by poison it is believed (1644-1670).

HENRIOT, a French revolutionary, born in Nanterre; was generalissimo of the National Guard of Paris during the Reign of Terror; marched with his sanaculotte following into the Convention one day and escorted 29 of the Girondists to the guillotine; became the satellite of Robespierre, whom he defended at the last, but could not deliver; arrested himself in a state of intoxication, was dragged out of a drain, and despatched by the guillotine (1761-1794).

HENRY, the unit of inductance of an electric circuit; named after Joseph Henry (q.v.); a coil has an inductance of one henry if a current changing at the rate of one ampere per second produces an electromotive force of one volt; the microhenry is the millionth part of a henry.

HENRY I., king of England from 1100 to 1135, youngest son of William the Conqueror, born in Selby, in Yorkshire; usurped the crown from his elder but irresponsible brother Robert, an act which was confirmed by the Church and the mass of the people, Robert, after a weak resistance, being pensioned off; the epithets Beaucercle and the Lion of Justice, which were bestowed on him, so far accurately describe him as he appeared to his people; his attainments were scholarly for his times, and his reign was distinguished by the strong and organized administration of justice, although morally his life was a depraved one; after seizing Normandy from his brother Robert, whom he imprisoned for life, he governed his kingdom with a firm hand; the turbulent Norman nobles were subdued, while the administration of the law was greatly improved by the institution of the Curia Regis (the King's Court) and of itinerant judges; trade took a start, and the religious life of the nation was deepened through the advent of the Cistercian monks and the influence of Anselm; he was married to Matilda (changed to Matilda), daughter of Malcolm of Scotland (1068-1135).

HENRY II., king of England from 1154 to 1189, first of the Plantagenet line; was the son of Matilda, daughter of Henry I., and her second husband Geoffrey Plantagenet, Count of Anjou, born in Le Mans; when he came to the throne as Stephen's successor he was already in possession, mainly through his marriage with Eleanor, the divorced wife of Louis VII., of more than half of France; he set himself with all the vigour of his energetic nature to reform the abuses which had become rampant under Stephen, and Thomas a Becket was his zealous Chancellor; the Great Council was frequently summoned to deliberate on national affairs; the Curia Regis was strengthened, the itinerant judges revived, while the oppression and immorality of the nobles was sternly suppressed by the demolition of the "adulterine castles"; a blow was aimed at the privileges and licentiousness of the clergy by the Constitutions of Clarendon, but their enactment brought about a rupture between the king and Becket, now Archbishop of Canterbury, which subsequently ended in the murder of Becket; in 1171 Ireland was invaded and annexed, and three years later William the Lion of Scotland was forced to declare his kingdom a fief to the English throne; some time previously the Welsh princes had done him homage; the last years of his reign were embittered by quarrels and strife with his ungrateful sons; he was a man of many kingly qualities, perhaps one of the best that England ever had, and his reign marks an epoch in the development of constitutional law and liberty (1133-1189).

HENRY III., king of England from 1216 to 1272, eldest son of King John; succeeded to the throne at the age of nine; during his minority the kingdom was wisely and faithfully served by the Earl of Pembroke and Hubert de Burgh; when he came to years he proved himself a weak ruler, and, according to Stubbs, his administration was "one long series of impulsive and unprincipled acts"; with the elevation of Peter des Roches, a native of Anjou, to the post of chief adviser, French interlopers won became predominant at the Court, and the recipients of large estates and pensions, an injustice further stimulated by the king's marriage with Eleanor of Provence; justice was prostituted, England humiliated under a feeble foreign policy, and the country finally roused by infamous exactions; Simon de Montfort, the king's own brother-in-law, became the leader of the people and the champion of constitutional rights; by the Provisions of Oxford, forced upon the king by Parliament assembled at Oxford (1258), a wider and more freer Parliamentary representation was given to the people, and the king's power limited by a permanent council of 15; as an issue of the Barons' War, which resulted in the defeat and capture of the king at Lewes (1264), these provisions were still further strengthened by the Mise of Lewes, and from this time may be dated the birth of representative government in England as it now exists; in 1265 was summoned the first Parliament as at present constituted, of peers temporal and spiritual, and representatives from counties, cities, and boroughs; internal dissensions ceased with the victory of Prince Edward over the barons at Evesham (1265), when the popular leader De Montfort perished on the field (1207-1272).

HENRY IV., king of England from 1399 to 1413, first of the Lancastrian kings, son of John of Gaunt, and grandchild of Edward III., born in Bolingbroke, in Lincolnshire; Richard II.'s misrule and despotism had damped the loyalty of his people, and when Henry came to England to maintain his ducal rights he had little difficulty in deposing Richard, and, with the consent of Parliament, in assuming the crown; this act of usurpation—for Richard's true heir was Roger Mortimer, a descendant of an older branch of the family—had two important results: it made Henry more obsequious to the Parliamentary power which had placed him on the throne, and it was the occasion of the bloody Wars of the Roses that were to devastate the kingdom during the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV.;

Henry's own reign was a troubled one; wars were successfully undertaken against the Welsh under Owen Glendower and against the Scots; while rebellion was raised by the Percies in unsuccessful attempts to win the crown for Mortimer; the only law of importance passed was the statute for burning heretics the first passed in England for the suppression of religious opinion (1366-1413).

HENRY V., king of England from 1413 to 1422, son of preceding, born in Monmouth; during the wars of his father's reign he gave evidence of his abilities as a soldier, distinguishing himself specially by his conquest of Wales; on his accession to the throne he renewed the claims put forward by Edward III. to the French crown, and with the support of his people embarked on his great struggle to win the kingdom of France; in 1415 he gained the glorious victory of Agincourt, strengthened his position by confirmed military successes, and by marrying Catherine, daughter of the French king, and by the treaty of Troyes, got himself appointed regent of France and successor to the throne; he was idolized by his people as the perfect pattern of a warrior king, but he had neither the gifts of statesmanship nor the foresight of Edward I., to whom he is compared, and the English dominion which he established in France was too unsubstantial to endure (1387-1422).

HENRY VI., king of England from 1422 to 1461, son of preceding, born in Windsor; was a child of nine months when his father died, and in the same year was acknowledged king over the N. and E. of France; the Dukes of Bedford and Gloucester became regents respectively over the English and French kingdoms; war was resumed with France, and for thirty years the weary struggle continued, by the end of which time England, despite some early successes, had been stripped of her French possessions, mainly owing to the enthusiasm awakened by the heroic and ill-fated Jeanne d'Arc (q.v.); the growing discontent of the people is indicated by Jack Cade's rebellion (1449), and five years later began the famous Wars of the Roses; six battles were fought between the rival houses; and four times victory rested with the Yorkists; after the final victory of the Yorkists at Towton (1461), Henry fled to Scotland and Edward was proclaimed king; Henry was a man of weak intellect, gentle, and of studious nature, and was ill-mated in his ambitious and warlike queen, Margaret of Anjou; a futile struggle was made to win his kingdom back, but the hopes of the Lancastrians perished at Tewkesbury; the king was captured and confined in the Tower, where, there is little doubt, he was murdered (1421-1471).

HENRY VII., king of England from 1485 to 1509, son of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, first of the Tudor monarchs, born at Pembroke Castle; after defeating and slaying Richard III. on Bosworth Field he assumed the crown, and by his marriage with Elizabeth of York, daughter of Edward IV., united the claims of the rival roses; his firm and prudent rule established quiet and order in the country; the pretensions of the pretenders Lambert Simnel and Perkin Warbeck were promptly crushed; a peaceful relationship was established with France, and the Scots were conciliated by the marriage of his daughter Margaret to their king, James IV.; increased prosperity followed, maritime enterprise was encouraged, but the kingly power grew at the expense of the constitutional authority of Parliament; resort was had to benevolences and other unconstitutional methods of raising funds, and in his later years the king's exactions became tyrannical; Henry was not a man of fine kingly qualities, but he accomplished much for his country, and is best described in Gardiner's words, "his contemporaries needed a chief constable to keep order, and he gave them what they needed" (1456-1509).

HENRY VIII., king of England from 1509 to 1547, son of preceding, born in Greenwich; was welcomed to the throne with great enthusiasm, and still further established himself in public favour by his gallant exploits at the Battle of Spurs and at the sieges of Tournay and Terouanne in the war of the Holy Alliance against France; in his absence an invasion of James IV. of Scotland was repulsed and the Scottish army crushed at Flodden (1513); during the first half of the reign public affairs were mainly conducted by the king's favourite minister, Wolsey, whose policy it was to hold the balance of power between Spain and France, but he fell into public disfavour by the heavy burden of taxation which he little by little laid upon the people; Henry, who in 1521 had been named "Defender of the Faith" by the Pope for his published defence of the sacraments against the attacks of Luther, was now moving for a divorce from his first wife Catherine of Aragon; a breach with the Pope ensued, Wolsey was deposed for his double-dealing in the matter, and Henry, having defiantly married Anne Boleyn, put an end to the papal jurisdiction in England to secure himself against appeals to the Papal Court, and got himself acknowledged Supreme Head of the Church of England; the suppression of the monasteries soon followed, and their estates were confiscated (1536-1540); in 1536 the movement of the Reformation was continued by the drawing up of the Ten Articles and by an authorized translation of the Bible; but the passing of the Six Articles three years later, declaring in favour of the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist, clerical celibacy, private masses, auricular confession, &c., was an attempt to stay the rapid spread of Protestant doctrines; in 1541 Henry was declared King of Ireland, and in the two following years successful wars were waged with Scotland and France; the importance of the reign lies in the coincidence of it with the rise and culmination of the Reformation, a movement brought about in the first instance by no higher motive than the king's desire for a divorce as well as for absolute power, but for which a favourable reception had been prepared beforehand by the spread of the new learning and that free spirit of inquiry that was beginning to take possession of men's minds; historians for the greater part agree in representing Henry as a man of versatile powers, considerable intellectual force, but, heedlessly selfish, and cruel in the gratification of his desires; he was six times married; Catherine and Anne of Cleves were divorced, Anne Boleyn and Catherine Howard executed, Jane Seymour died in childbirth, and Catherine Parr survived him; he left behind to succeed him on the throne Mary, daughter of Catherine, Elizabeth, daughter of Anne Boleyn, and Edward, son of Jane Seymour (1491-1547).

HENRY III., an illustrious Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, son of Conrad II.; in 1026 he became king of the Germans, succeeded to the dukedoms of Bavaria and Swabia, and in 1039 assumed the Imperial crown; under his strong and wise government, dissensions, papal and otherwise, were put down, the territory of the empire extended, and many churches and monastic schools established (1017-1056).

HENRY IV., Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, son of preceding; his reign is memorable as witnessing the first open claim on the part of the Papal power to have dominion over the crowned heads of Europe; Henry's attempt to depose Gregory VII. was bodily met by a declaration of excommunication; Henry was forced to do penance and to receive his crown afresh from the Pope; but the struggle broke out anew; Clement III. was put up in opposition, and the contest raged with varying success till the deposition of Henry by his ungrateful son (1056-1106).

HENRY IV., king of France from 1594 till 1610, surname "The Great" and "The Good"; during his reign the great struggle between the Huguenots and the Catholics continued with unabated fury; Henry saved his life in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day by renouncing his early Calvinism, but was imprisoned; four years later he was again at the head of the Huguenot army and, defeating the Bourbon claimant for the throne, was crowned king, but not before waiving his Protestant principles to conciliate the people; in 1598 he issued the famous Edict of Nantes, giving freedom of worship to the Huguenots; during his administration the nation was consolidated, new roads and a growing trade knit the towns together; financial reforms of great importance were carried out by his celebrated minister, Duc de Sally (q.v.); Henry was assassinated by instigation of the Jesuits (1663-1610).

HENRY OF HUNTINGDON, a noted English chronicler of the 12th century, who became archdeacon of Huntingdon, and wrote a Latin history of England down to the death of Stephen in 1154.

HENRY THE NAVIGATOR, son of John I., king of Portugal, born in Oporto; an able, enterprising man, animated with a zeal for maritime discovery, who at his own expense sent out voyagers who discovered the Madeira Islands and explored the coast of Africa as far as Cape Blanco; is said to have been the first to employ the compass for purposes of navigation; his mother was daughter of John of Gaunt (1394-1460).

HENRY, JOSEPH, American scientist; carried out much research in connection with electromagnetism and induction (1799-1878).

HENRY, MATTHEW, a Nonconformist divine; was minister at Hackney, London; was the author of a commentary long in repute among pious evangelical people, and to some extent still, as a practical and devotional guide in the study of the Scriptures (1662-1714).

HENRY, O., pen name of William Sydney Porter, American writer. He edited several periodicals and produced a number of short stories of an original and humorous character (1862-1910).

HENRY, PATRICK, American statesman and orator, born in Virginia; having been in business he took to law, and rose into fame by his eloquent pleadings in the cause of the people; played a conspicuous part in the agitation for independence, especially by his oratory, which was of a quality to move large audiences; he was a member of the first Congress in 1774 (1736-1799).

HENRYSON, ROBERT, an early Scottish poet, flourished in the 16th century; most of his life was spent as a schoolmaster in Dunfermline; his chief works, which are full of pathos, humour, and a fine descriptive power, include "Restment of Cressid," a continuation of Chaucer's tale, "Robene and Makyns," the earliest Scottish pastoral, a metrical version of some of "Æsop's Fables," and the story of "Orpheus and Eurydice" (c. 1430-1508).

HEPHAËSTOS, called Vulcan by the Romans, the Greek god of fire, or of labour in the element of fire, the son of Zeus and Hera, represented as ill-shapen, lame, and ungainly, so much so as to be an object of ridicule to the rest of the pantheon, but he was indispensable to the dynasty, and to none more than his father and mother, who were often unkind to him; he had his smithy in Olympus in the vicinity of the gods, and the marvellous creations of his art were shaped on an anvil, the hammer of which was piled by 20 bellows that worked at his bidding; in later traditions he had his workshop elsewhere, and the Cyclops for his servants, employed in manufacturing thunder-bolts for Zeus; he was wedded to Aphrodite, whom he caught playing false with Ares, both of whom he trapped in a net a spectacle to all the upper deities.

HEPTAD, a term in chemistry to denote an atom that is the equivalent of seven atoms of hydrogen, from Greek hepta, seven.

HEPTARCHY, ANGLO-SAXON, the seven kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumbria, East Anglia, and Mercia, the chief of those established by the Saxons during the 6th century in Great Britain.

HEPTATEUCH, a name given to the first seven books of the Bible.

HERA, called Juno by the Romans, daughter of Cronos and Rhea, and sister and wife of Zeus; was the queen of heaven in Greek mythology, and treated with the same reverence as her husband, but being inferior in power was bound to obey him equally with the rest, or suffer if she did not; she was jealous of Zeus in his amours with mortals, and persecuted all his children by mortal mothers. Hercules among the chief.

HERACLIDÆ, Spartans, presumed descendants of Hercules, who at one time invaded and took possession of the Peloponnese.

HERACLES, a Greek philosopher, born in Ephesus.

who flourished about the year 480 B.C.; was the first to note how everything throughout the universe is in constant flux, and nothing permanent but in transition from being to nothing and from nothing to being, from life to death and from death to life, that nothing is, that everything becomes, that the truth of being is becoming, that no one, nothing, is exempt from this law, the law symbolized by the fable of the Phoenix in the fire (q.v.).

HERACLIUS, Emperor of the East from 610 to 642, born in Cappadocia; raised to the throne of the East on account of the services he rendered the citizens of Constantinople in getting rid of a tyrant; waged war against the hostile Persians, defeated Chosroes and compelled a peace, but was unable to withstand the arms of the Moslem invaders.

HERALDS' COLLEGE, a body existing to trace genealogies and to grant coats-of-arms; it was founded in 1488 and is presided over by the Earl Marshal, an hereditary post held by the Dukes of Norfolk.

HERAT, the chief town of the province of Herat, in W. Afghanistan, on the Hari-Rud, 800 m. W. of Kabul; its central position has given it a great commercial and military importance; it has manufactures of leather and wool, and as a place of great strategical value, since the advance of Russia in Asia, is strongly fortified by a British citadel and garrison.

HERAULT, a maritime dep. of S. France fronting the Gulf of Lyons; in the N. are the Cevennes Mountains, but wide plains fringed on the sea border with large lagoons occupy the S.; the climate, except on the marshy coast, is dry and healthy; its former importance as a wine-growing district has greatly diminished, but olives and almonds are cultivated, sheep and silkworms bred; coal is the most important mineral; salt is obtained in large quantities from the salt marshes, and fishing is an important industry.

HERBART, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, German philosopher, born in Oldenburg; Kant's successor at Königsberg, professor also at Göttingen twice; founded his philosophy like Kant on the criticism of subjective experience, but it arrived at different results, and arrayed itself against the whole post-Kantian philosophy of Germany; it is described by Schwegler "as an extension of the monadology of Leibnitz, full of ingenuity but devoid of inward fertility, or any germ of movement"; he failed to see, as Dr. Stirling points out, that "Philosophy is possible only on the supposition of a single principle that possesses within itself the capability of transition into all existent variety and varieties" (1776-1841).

HERBERT, EDWARD, LORD, of Cherbury, diplomatist, soldier, and scholar, born in Montgomery Castle, in Wales; served as a soldier under Maurice of Orange; was twice ambassador in France, but chiefly devoted to philosophical speculation; was the first of the deistical writers of England, though his deism was dogmatic not critical, positive not sceptical, as is that of the subsequent English deists (1583-1633).

HERBERT, GEORGE, poet, brother of the preceding, born in Montgomery Castle; falling in preference at Court, took holy orders and became rector of Bemerton, Wiltshire, a post he lived only two years to hold; was the author of a Christian poem entitled "The Temple", held in high regard by people of the devout and reverently contemplative spirit of the author; his memory is embalmed in a Life of him by Isaac Walton (1593-1633).

HERBERT, SIDNEY (Lord Herbert of Lea), politician, born in Richmond; entered the House of Commons in 1832 as a Tory, and was in turn Secretary to the Admiralty and War Secretary under Peel; during the Aberdeen ministry he, as War Secretary, incurred much popular disfavour for the mismanagement of the Crimean War, but under Palmerston he effected many beneficial reforms while at the head of the War Office; greatly aided Florence Nightingale (q.v.) at Scutari; he was elevated to the House of Lords in 1860 (1810-1861).

HERCULANEUM, a city of ancient Italy, overwhelmed in A.D. 68, 79, and 472, with Pompeii and Stables by eruptions of Vesuvius, at the north-western base of which it was situated, 5 m. E. of Naples; so completely was it buried by the ashes and lava that its site was practically obliterated, and in time two villages sprang up on the new surface, 40 to 100 ft. below which lay a great part of the buried city; relics were discovered while digging a well in 1706, and since then a considerable portion of the town has been excavated, pictures, statues, &c., of the greatest value having been brought to light.

HERCULES, the typical hero of the Greeks, son of Zeus and Alkmene, and tried therefore by Hera, who persecuted him from his cradle, sending two serpents to devour him as he lay there, but which he strangled with his arms; grown into manhood, and distinguished for his stature and strength, was doomed by the artifice of Hera to a series of perilous adventures before he could claim his rights as a son of his father; these are known as the "Twelve Labours of Hercules": the first, the throttling of the Nemean lion; the second, the killing of the Lernean hydra; the third, the hunt and capture of the hind of Diana, with its hoofs of brass; the fourth, the taking alive of the boar of Erymanthus; the fifth, the cleansing of the stables of Augeas; the sixth, the destruction of the Stymphalian birds; the seventh, the capture of the Cretan bull; the eighth, the capture of the mares of Diomedes of Thrace; the ninth, the seizure of the girdle of the queen of the Amazons; the tenth, the killing of Geryon and capture of his oxen; the eleventh, fetching of the golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides; the twelfth, dragging Cerberus to the light of day. These were the twelve, but in addition, he strangled the giant Antæus, slew the robber Cacus, delivered Hesione, unchained Prometheus from the rocks of Caucasus, and smote the centaur Nessus, the last proving the cause of his death. See NESSUS.

HERCULES, THE CHOICE OF, the choice of a life of virtue offered to him by Athens, in preference to a life of pleasure offered by Amphitrite, in his youth.

HERCULES, THE PILLARS OF, two mountains on the opposite sides of the Strait of Gibraltar, originally one, but failed to have been separated by Hercules, Calpe on the Spanish coast and Abyla on the African.

HOFFMANN, AUGUST HEINRICH, poet and philologist, born in Fallersleben; studied literature and philology under the influence of the Grimms, and in 1835 was appointed professor of the German Language at Breslau, a post he forfeited seven years later by publishing "Lays" of somewhat radical tendencies; he led an unsettled life till 1860, when he became librarian to the Duke of Ratibor; his writings include "German Social Songs of the 16th and 17th Centuries," "German Philology," an "Autobiography" in six vols., lyrics, &c. (1798-1874).

HOFFMANN, AUGUST WILHELM, German chemist, professor at Berlin; his researches were mainly in connection with the aniline or coal-tar dyes; discovered a violet dye named after him; spent several years at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington; discoverer of allyl alcohol (1818-1892).

HOFFMANN, ERNST THEODORE WILHELM, a celebrated German writer, whose versatility displayed itself in numerous tales, sketches, art-criticism, &c., all bearing the impress of a strong, if wayward, intellect; born in Königsberg, was trained to the law, and entered the State service; his position at Warsaw was lost to him on the entry of the French troops in 1806, and for some years he supported himself by musical criticism in Leipzig, and as director of a Dresden opera company; in 1816 he was again in government service at Berlin, where he continued till his death; his writings are strongly characteristic of the romanticism of his time, while he himself was a witty, restless leader of the romantic life (1776-1822).

HOGARTH, WILLIAM, a famous English painter, caricaturist, and engraver, born in London; served his time as a silversmith's apprentice; studied painting, and began to support himself by engraving and etching; unsuccessful in his attempts at portrait-painting, he at length found his true vocation in depicting the follies and vices of his age; "A Harlot's Progress," a series of six pictures engraved by himself, appeared in 1731, and was soon followed by others of a like nature, including "A Rake's Progress," "Strolling Actresses dressing in a Barn," "Marriage à la Mode," "Idleness and Industry"; he also produced some indifferent historical paintings; in 1757 he was appointed sergeant-painter to the King; in his own department Hogarth has never been equalled, and in the opinion of Sir Joshua Reynolds never will be; the deep moral purpose of his best pictures, made known throughout the country by abundant prints, must have helped not a little to reform the manners of his time (1697-1784).

HOGG, JAMES, a Scottish poet, born in Ettrick; had little or no schooling; was bred a shepherd; took to rhyming; fell in with Sir Walter Scott, whom he assisted with his "Border Minstrelsy"; rented a farm, and first came into notice by the publication of his poem, the "Queen's Wake"; he wrote in prose as well as poetry, with humour as well as no little graphic power; "was," says Carlyle, "a little red-skinned stiff sack of a body, with two little blue or grey eyes that sparkled, if not with thought, yet with animation; was a real product of nature" (1770-1835).

HOGG, QUINTIN, philanthropist and educational reformer. He was the founder in 1882 of the London Polytechnic (1845-1908).

HOGMANAY, Scotland's New Year's Eve festivities, when it was the custom to go from house to house asking in impromptu rhyme for cakes or money.

HOHENLANDEN, a village in Upper Bavaria, 50 m. E. of Munich, celebrated as the scene of a victory by the French under Moreau over the Austrians under Archduke John on December 8, 1800.

HOHENSTAUFENS, THE, the third dynasty of the Romanish kaisers, which held the imperial throne from 1138 to 1254, commencing with Frederick I. or Barbarossa, and ending with Conrad IV., five in all; derived their name from a castle on the Hohenstaufen Berg, by the left bank of the Danube, 80 m. below Stuttgart.

HOHENZOLLERNS, THE, the family which in 1415 became electors of Brandenburg, kings of Prussia, and at length emperors of Germany; derived their name from an old castle so called near the springs of the Danube, a little way north from Constance and its lake. In 1918, at the end of the Great War, Wilhelm II. abdicated and Germany became a republic.

HOKUSAI, Japanese artist, who was the first modern of his race to blend colour in native landscapes. Shortly before he died at the age of 89 he said, "If Fate had given me but five more years I should have been able to become a true painter"; but the verdict of posterity is that Hokusai does rank with the greatest painters of the world (1760-1849).

HOLBACH, BARON VON, a French philosopher born in Heideleheim, in the Palatinate, of wealthy parents; lived from youth all his days in Paris, kept a good table, and entertained all the "Encyclopédie" notabilities at his board; wrote "Système de la Nature," and was a materialist in philosophy and an atheist in religion, but a kind-hearted man (1723-1789).

HOLBEIN, HANS, a German painter, born in Augsburg, trained by his father, a painter of religious subjects; attracted the attention of Erasmus, who took a great interest in him and persuaded him to go to England, and introduced him to Sir Thomas More, who in turn introduced him to Henry VIII.; here under Henry's patronage he remained, executing numerous portraits of his courtiers, till his death of the plague; his "Last Supper" and "Dance of Death" are well known (1497-1543).

HOLBERG, LUDWIG, BARON, an eminent Danish author, born in Bergen, in Norway; graduated at Copenhagen, where, after travel, he became professor of Metaphysics; subsequently he held in turn the chairs of Eloquence and of History; he was an author of great versatility, excelling as a writer of satires, comedies, and as historian of Church and State; his autobiography is an interesting work, and many of his plays and other productions are among the accepted classics of Danish literature (1684-1741).

HOLBROFT, THOMAS, journalist, playwright, and political novelist, born in London; began life as an actor; wrote "Road to Ruin"; was charged with treason, but acquitted; left "Memoirs" (1744-1809).

HOLDEN, SIR ISAAC, inventor, born in Hurlet,

Renfrewshire; worked in a cotton-mill in Paisley, but betook himself to teaching, and in 1829, while a teacher of chemistry in Reading, discovered the principle of the lucifer match; turning to wool-combing as a means of livelihood, he became established near Paris, where he carried out elaborate experiments, which resulted in improvements in wool-combing machinery that brought him fame and fortune; in 1859 he transferred his works to the vicinity of Bradford; entered Parliament in 1865, and was created a baronet in 1893 (1807-1897).

HOLINSHED, RAPHAEL, English chronicler of the Elizabethan age; his "Chronicle," published in two vols. in 1577, supplied Shakespeare with materials for some of his historical plays; d. 1580.

HOLL, FRANCIS MONTAGUE, artist, born in Kentish Town, London; was highly distinguished as an art student, and at 23 won the travelling studentship of the Academy; came into notice first as a genre-painter, exhibiting pictures of a pathetic nature, such as "Want—the Pawnbroker's Shop," "Newgate—Committed for Trial," "Ordered to the Front," &c.; subsequently he won a wide celebrity as a portrait-painter, producing portraits of the Prince of Wales, Gladstone, and other distinguished personages (1845-1898).

HOLLAND, officially known as the Netherlands, a small maritime country of Western Europe, bordered on its N. and W. by the German Ocean, and having Prussia on its E. and Belgium to the S.; its area, somewhat less than one-fourth the size of England and Wales, comprises, besides the mainland, two island groups, one in the N. and one in the S.; its flat surface in great part lies below the level of the sea, and where there are no natural sandhills is protected from inundation by enormous dykes, 365 ft. thick, forming excellent carriage-ways along the coast; much of the soil has been reclaimed by draining lakes and by pushing back the sea walls, the size of the country having been increased by one-half since 1833; canals traverse the country in all directions, and form with the shallow lakes and the great rivers a complete system of waterways. The climate is for the most part similar to that of England, but greater extremes of heat and cold are experienced. Farming is the staple industry, although a considerable portion of the land is still unfit for cultivation; butter and cheese are the most valuable products, and are largely exported; the fisheries, coast and deep sea, are also of much importance; manufactures are retarded by the want of coal, but the wind is made to supply the motive power, by means of windmills, to flourishing textile factories (cotton, woollen, and silk), gin distilleries, pottery works, margarine and cocoa factories, &c. Holland no longer is the premier shipping country of Europe, a position it held in the 17th century, but it still maintains a busy carrying trade with all parts of the world, especially with its many rich colonies in the East and West Indies, which comprise an area 64 times larger than Holland itself. The government is a limited monarchy; the executive power is vested in the crown and the legislation in the States-General, an assembly consisting of two chambers, the one elected (for four years) by direct suffrage, the other (for nine years) by provincial councils. Primary education is free, but not compulsory. Religion is not established, but about two-thirds of the people are Protestants, the remainder Roman Catholics. The birth of Holland as an independent European power took place in the 16th century, when, after an arduous and protracted struggle, it freed itself from the yoke of Spain, then the most powerful nation in the world.

HOLLAND, HENRY RICHARD FOX VASSALL-HOLLAND, BARON, statesman, born in Wilts.; succeeded to the title in 1774; entered on a public career as a Whig under the patronage of his uncle Charles James Fox; held office under Grenville, Grey, and Melbourne; was imbued with a fine humanitarian spirit, and fought ably against the slave-trade and the corn-laws; his cultured literary taste is revealed in his writings, which embrace Spanish translations, lives of Guillen de Castro and Lope de Vega, Memoirs, &c. (1773-1840).

HOLLAND, SIR HENRY, physician and author, born in Knutsford, Cheshire; graduated at Edinburgh in 1811; spent some years in Eastern Europe, and finally settled in London; he rose to be physician-in-ordinary to the Prince Consort and the Queen, and in 1883 was created a baronet; wrote essays on various branches of medicine, physiology, psychology, besides "Recollections of Past Life" (1788-1878).

HOLLAND, NORTH, one of the eleven provinces of Holland; comprises the peninsula lying between the Zuider Zee and the North Sea. South Holland, also a province, in the German Ocean between Zealand and North Holland. These provinces form the most important part of the Netherlands, raise the best farm produce and cattle, and in their great ports, Amsterdam and Rotterdam, the bulk of the trade of Holland is carried on.

HOLLES, DENZIL, LORD, statesman, and one of the "five members," the son of the Earl of Clare, born in Houghton, Northamptonshire; entering Parliament in 1624, he joined the opposition against the king, and actively resisted the imposition of tonnage and poundage, for which he was heavily fined and imprisoned; subsequently he was one of the five members whom Charles attempted to arrest in 1642 on a charge of high-treason; his opposition to the maintenance of a standing Puritan army involved him in trouble, and he fled the country; after Cromwell's death he returned, was prominent in promoting the Restoration, received a peerage, and for some years was engaged in public duties, still remaining a staunch upholder of the rights of Parliament (1599-1680).

HOLLOWAY, a northern district of London, in Islington parish; contains a prison, built in 1800, now confined to women.

HOLLWEG, VON BETHMANN, German politician. As Chancellor of the German Empire from 1909 to 1917 he was one of the Kaiser's right-hand men. He made himself famous by the phrase "a scrap of paper," a phrase he applied to the treaty guaranteeing Belgium's neutrality which the British ambassador protested against Germany invading Belgium in August, 1914 (1856-1921).

HOLMES, OLIVER WENDELL, a celebrated American author, born, the son of a Congregational minister, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and graduated in arts and medicine at Harvard; became professor of Anatomy and Physiology at Dartmouth College, but resigned and settled in Boston as a general practitioner; in 1847 he was elected to the chair of Anatomy in Harvard, a position he held till his resignation in 1882; a successful professor, it is as an essayist, novelist, and poet that he is remembered; the appearance of "The Autocrat at the Breakfast-Table," with its quaint humour, fresh thought, and charming egotism took literary America by storm; the "Professor" and the "Poet at the Breakfast-Table" followed in after years, and remain his most widely popular works; "Elsie Venner," a novel dealing with the problem of heredity, "The Guardian Angel," "Songs of Many Seasons," "Memoirs of Motley and of Emerson," are some of his many works, all of which, with his poems, have the impress of his bright, engaging personality (1809-1894).

HOLOFERNES, the Assyrian general whom the Jewish Judith, entering his camp as it invested her native place, slew with her own hand, bearing his head as a trophy back to the town.

HOLST, GUSTAV, British composer. Born and educated in Cheltenham, he has written two operas, "The Perfect Fool" and "At the Boar's Head," besides a number of hymns and songs (1874-).

HOLSTEIN, which with Sleswick forms the Prussian province of Sleswick-Holstein (q.v.), was till 1866 a duchy of Denmark, but in that year was annexed by Prussia, but part was returned in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles.

HOLT, FRANCIS LUDLOW, legal and dramatic author. Matriculated at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1798. Barrister and editor. Wrote "The Land we Live in." His chief legal works were, "The Law of Libel," 1812, and "The Shipping and Navigation Laws," 1820 (1780-1844).

HOLT, SIR JOHN, English lawyer, born in Thame,

Oxfordshire; called to the bar in 1669; was a prominent counsel in the State trials of his age, and rose to be Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench under William III., an office whose duties he discharged with unflinching integrity and fairness (1642-1710).

HOLTZMANN, ADOLF, an eminent German philologist, born in Karlsruhe; gave himself to the study of theology and then of philology at various universities, and in 1858 became professor of the German Language and Literature at Heidelberg; author of various learned treatises on philology and kindred subjects (1810-1870).

upon him $60,000 and forced him to return it: he is supposed to have suggested to Browning his well-known poem "Sludge—the Medium"; wrote several books (1833-1886).

HOMER, JOHN, Scottish divine and dramatist, born in Leith; graduated at Edinburgh, and entered the Church in 1746; became minister at Athelstaneford, near Haddington, where he wrote the tragedies "Agis" and "Douglas"; the latter established his fame, but brought him into disgrace with the Presbytery, and he withdrew to England, becoming secretary to the Earl of Bute; his plays were produced by Garrick, and displaced the stiff and artificial tragedies of Addison, Johnson, &c.; besides his dramatic works and poems he published a "History of the Rebellion of 1745" (1722-1808).

HOME RULE, a form of local self-government, which as applied to Ireland was for long a bone of contention between Liberals and Conservatives. Gladstone introduced the first Home Rule Bill in 1886, and others followed in 1893, 1912, and 1913, all of which were defeated. In 1914 a Bill was passed, but was to remain inoperative till after the Great War, when extremists in southern Ireland refused to accept it and led their country into civil war till 1922 when the Irish Free State (q.v.) was established. Ulster remained a province of the United Kingdom with Home Rule.

HOMER, the great epic poet of Greece, and the greatest of all time; author of the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey"; for the honour of being the place of his birth seven Greek cities contended; is said, when old and blind, to have wandered from city to city rehearsing his verses, and to have lived 900 years before Christ, some time after the reign of Solomon; it is only modern criticism that has called in question his existence, and has ventured to argue that the poems ascribed to him are a mere collection of compositions of the early fabulous age of Greece, but the unity of the plan and the simplicity of the style of the poems go to condemn this theory in the regard of many Homeric scholars.

HOMILDON HILL, in Northumberland, 1 m. N.E. of Wooler; the scene of Hottspur's famous victory over the Scots under Earl Douglas, September 14, 1402.

HONORIUS, FLAVIUS, emperor of the West, born in Constantinople, son of Theodosius the Great, a weak ruler, and only able to resist the invasion of the Goths so long as Stilicho, his minister, lived, for after the murder of the latter by treacherous matters with him went from bad to worse, and he saw some of his finest provinces snatched from his grasp (384-423).

HONTHEIM, JOHANN NIKOLAUS VON, a German Catholic theologian, born in Trèves; distinguished for his bold assertion and subsequent retraction of a doctrine called Febronianism, from the nom de plume Febronius which he assumed, tending to the disavowment of the Papal authority in the Church (1701-1790).

HONTHORST, GERARD VAN, a Flemish painter, born in Utrecht, painted night and torchlight scenes; "Christ before Pilate" his best-known work (1590-1658).

HOOD, HORACE LAMBERT ALEXANDER, British admiral. A member of the famous naval family of Hoods, he entered the service at 13, saw service in the Nile in 1897, took charge of Osborne College, and in 1916 commanded the third battle-cruiser squadron at Jutland, going down on the Invincible, his flagship (1870-1916).

HOOD, ROBIN, a famous outlaw of the time of Edward II., who is assigned by some writers to Richard I.'s reign; of yeoman descent, though attempts have been made to identify him as the Earl of Huntingdon; he and his followers, all noted archers, roved the extensive forest of Sherwood between Nottingham and Yorkshire, winning popular favour by their attacks on the nobles and ecclesiastics who oppressed the poor.

HOOD, SAMUEL, VISCOUNT, a distinguished admiral, born in Thorncombe; entered the navy in 1740, and rising rapidly in his profession evinced high qualities as a leader; in 1782 he brilliantly outmanoeuvred De Grasse in the West Indies, and under Rodney played a conspicuous part in the destruction of the French fleet at the battle of Dominica, for which he was rewarded with an Irish peerage; he defeated Fox in the celebrated Westminster election, became a Lord of the Admiralty, and as commander of the Mediterranean fleet during the revolutionary wars, captured the French fleet at Toulon and reduced Corsica; in 1796 he was created a viscount (1794-1816).

HOOD, THOMAS, poet and humorist, born in London; gave up business and engraving, to which he first applied himself, for letters, and commencing as a journalist, immortalized himself by the "Song of the Shirt," "The Bridge of Sighs," and his "Dream of Eugene Aram," edited the "Comic Annual," and wrote "Whims and Oddities" in all of which he displayed both wit and pathos (1798-1845).

HOOGHLY, or HUGLI, (1) the most important and most westerly of the several branches into which the Ganges divides on approaching the sea, breaks away from the main channel near Santipur, and flowing in a southerly direction past Calcutta, reaches the Bay of Bengal after a course of 145 m.; navigation is rendered hazardous by the accumulating and shifting silt; the "bore" rushes up with great rapidity, and attains a height of 7 ft. (2) A city on the western bank of the river, 25 m. N. of Calcutta; is capital of a district, and has a college for English and native literature.

HOOK, THEODORE EDWARD, comic dramatist, born in London; wrote a number of farces sparkling with wit and highly popular; appointed to be Accountant-General of the Mauritius, came to grief for peculation by a subordinate under his administration; isolated and supported himself after his acquittal by writing novels (1788-1841).

HOOKER, ROBERT, natural philosopher, born in Freshwater, Isle of Wight; was associated with Boyle in the construction of the air-pump, and in 1665 became professor of Geometry in Gresham College, London; was a man of remarkable inventiveness, and quick to deduce natural laws from meagre premises; thus he in some important points anticipated Newton's theory of gravitation, and foresaw the application of steam to machinery; he discovered amongst other things the balance-spring of watches, the anchor-escapement of clocks, the simplest theory of the arch, and made important improvements on the telescope, microscope, and quadrant (1635-1703).

HOOKER, RICHARD, English Church theologian and ecclesiastical writer, born in Exeter; famous as the author of "Ecclesiastical Polity," in defence of the Church against the Puritans, characterised by Stopford Brooke as "a stately work, and the first monument of splendid literary prose that we possess"; of this work Pope Clement VIII. said, "There are such seeds of eternity in it as will continue till the last fire shall devour all learning"; the author is distinguished by the surname of "The Judicious" for his calm wisdom; he was not judicious, it would seem, in the choice of a wife, who was a shrew and a scold (1554-1600).

HOOKER, SIR JOSEPH DALTON, naturalist and traveller; visited India, Syria, and Morocco, and was appointed director of Kew Gardens in 1866; published valuable works on the flora of India and other countries (1817-1911).

IBYOUS, a Greek lyric poet, who was murdered by robbers, and who appealed to a flock of cranes that flew past before he died to avenge his death; the birds proved the means by which the murderers were discovered.

ICARUS, son of Daedalus (q.v.), who, flying with his father from Crete on wax-fastened wings, soared so high that the sun melted the wax and he dropped into the sea, giving name to that part of it.

ICE AGES, four in number, occurred in the early Pleistocene period; they were separated by periods of milder climate; at its greatest phase the polar ice covered much of Northern Europe and North America, extending in this country as far south as the Thames; the earliest men appeared before the end of the last glacial age.

ICE BLINK, the name given to a white light seen on the horizon, due to reflection from a field of ice immediately beyond.

ICEBERGS, detached portions of glaciers which float into the sea. Found largely in the N. Atlantic in the Spring, they are a menace to shipping on account of the large proportion of a berg's mass which is hidden under the surface. One of them caused in 1912 the loss of the Titanic.

ICELAND, a volcanic island larger by a third than Scotland, lying just S. of the polar circle, between Greenland and Norway, distant 250 m. from the former and 500 from the latter; consists of a plateau 2000 ft. high, sometimes sloping to the sea, sometimes ending in sheer precipices, from which rise numerous snow-clad volcanoes, some, like Hecia, still active. The interior comprises lava and sand tracts and ice-fields, but outside these are river valleys and lake districts affording pasturage, and arable land capable of producing root crops. The climate is changeable, mild for the latitude, but somewhat colder than Scotland. There are few trees, and these small; cranberries grow among the heather, and Iceland moss is a plentiful article of food. The island exports sheep and ponies; the fisheries are important, including cod, seals, and whales; sulphur and coal are found; the hot springs are famous, especially the Great Geyser, near Hecia. Discovered by Irishmen and colonised by Norwegians in the 9th century, Iceland passed over to the Danes in 1386, who granted it home rule in 1893. The religion has been Protestant since 1550; its elementary education is excellent. Reykjavik is the capital; most of the population is scattered in isolated farms; stock-raising and fishing are the principal industries, with the manufacture of homespun for their own use.

ILFRACOMBE, a popular watering-place on the coast of N. Devon, in the Bristol Channel; once an important seaport.

ILIAD, the great epic poem of Homer, consisting of 24 books, the subject of which is the "wrath of Achilles," and the events which followed during the last year of the ten years' Trojan War, so called from ILION, one of the names of Troy. See ILIUM.

ILITHYA, the Greek goddess who presided over the travail of women at childbirth, promoting or retarding the birth as the Fates might ordain.

ILIUM, Troy (q.v.), so called from Ilios, the son of Troas, who founded the city.

ILLINOIS, one of the States of the U.S.A., as large as England and Wales; has the Mississippi for its western, the Ohio for its southern boundary, with Wisconsin and Lake Michigan in the N. and Indiana on the E.; fourth in population, seventeenth in area, "the Prairie State" is level, well watered, and extremely fertile; has a climate subject to extremes, but, except in the swamps, healthy. It produces enormous quantities of wheat, besides other cereals, with tobacco and temperate fruits. Flour-milling and pork-packing are the chief industries. The most extensive coal-deposits in America are in this State; with navigable rivers on its borders, and traversing it Lake Michigan, a great canal, and the largest railway system in the Union, it is admirably situated for commercial development; originally acquired by Britain from the French, who entered it from Canada, it was ceded to the Americans in 1783, and admitted to the Union 1818; the State has a large and wealthy scientific and agricultural university at Urbana. Springfield is the capital; but Chicago is the largest city.

ILLUMINATI, an ecclesiastical order founded in Bavaria in 1776 with the object of opposing Jesuit teaching; it was suppressed by the rival order some eight years afterwards; the name has been applied to several secret organisations in France, Germany, and Spain during the 17th and 18th centuries, in the first-named country denoting a Republican fraternity with materialistic views.

ILLYRIA, the name anciently given to a broad stretch of mountainous country of varying extent lying E. of the Adriatic Sea. The Illyrians were the last Balkan people to be civilised; becoming a Roman province 35 B.C., Illyria furnished several emperors, among them the notorious Diocletian. The province was extended to include all the country S. of the Danube; at the division of the empire, Greece and Macedonia went to the East, the rest to the West; the name was revived by Napoleon, but has since been dropped.

ILUS, a legendary king of Troy, the grandson of Dardanus, and the legendary founder of Ilium.

IMAGE WORSHIP in the Christian Church is reverence, as distinct from the supreme adoration of the Deity, paid to the crucifix and to pictures, images, or statues of saints and martyrs, and understood really as offered through these to the persons whom they represent. The practice, unknown in apostolic or sub-apostolic times, was prevalent in the 4th century, provoked by its excesses a severe reaction in the 8th century, but carefully defined by the second Council of Nice (787), has continued since both in the Greek and Roman communion; there is still controversy as to its propriety in the Anglican Church; the Lutherans use the crucifix freely, but other Protestant Churches have entirely repudiated the practice. See ICONOCLASTS.

IMAM is the title of the officer who leads the devotions in Mohammedan mosques, and in Turkey conducts marriage and funeral services, as well as performs the ceremonies connected with circumcision; the office was filled and the title borne by Mohammed, hence it sometimes signifies head of the faith, and was so applied to the Sultan of Turkey; good Mohammedans believe in the future advent of an Imâm—the hidden Imâm—who shall be greater than the Prophet himself.

IMMAUS, a name the ancients gave to any large mountain chain in Asia, more particularly one bordering on India, or looking down upon it, as the home of the Arvans.

IMITATION OF CHRIST, a book of pious reflections, unique in its kind, and much esteemed by piously thoughtful people; ascribed to Thomas à Kempis (c. 15).

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, the doctrine held by the Roman Catholic Church that the Virgin Mary was conceived and born without taint of sin; first distinctly propounded in the 12th century, at which time a festival was introduced in celebration of it, it became matter of dispute in the 14th century, and it was only in 1854 that it became by a bull an article of the Catholic faith.

IMMERMANN, KARI LEBERECHE, German novelist and dramatist, born in Mardeburg; fought at Waterloo; entered the public service of Prussia and obtained an appointment at Düsseldorf, where he died; his fame rests upon his miscellaneous tales and satirical novels, such as "Münchhausen"; his dramas consisted of both tragedies and comedies (1796-1840).

IMMORTALITY, the doctrine of the continued existence of the soul of each individual after death, a doctrine the belief of which is, in one form or another, common to most religious systems, even to those which contemplate absorption in the Deity as the final goal of existence, as is evident from the prevalence in them of the doctrine of transmigration or reincarnation.

IMMORTALS, a regiment of 10,000 foot soldiers who formed the body-guard of the ancient Persian kings; in modern times the name given to the 40 members of the French Academy.

IMOGEN, the daughter of Cymbeline, in Shakespeare's play of that name, a perfect female character, pronounced "the most tender and the most artless of all Shakespeare's women."

IMPERIAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, a college at South Kensington, London, connected with but separate from the University of London (q.v.); it was formed in 1907 by the incorporation of the Royal College of Science, the Royal School of Mines, and the City and Guilds Engineering College; many of the students read for the B.Sc. degree of London University.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE, a meeting of the Prime Ministers of Great Britain and the self-governing dominions held every four years, the first taking place in 1911.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE, South Kensington, founded by the exertions of the Prince of Wales in 1887 to commemorate Queen Victoria's jubilee, was opened by her in 1893; was intended to include a complete collection of the products of the British Empire, a grand commercial intelligence bureau, and a school of modern Oriental languages; the government to be carried on by a chartered body, whose form of constitution was granted by a royal warrant of date April 21, 1891; in 1902 it was transferred to the control of the Board of Trade, and in 1916 by an Act of Parliament was placed under the management of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, assisted by an executive council; its principal work is the promotion of inter-imperial trade in raw materials, by investigations, exhibitions, &c.

IMPERIAL PREFERENCE, the practice of imposing a preferential tariff on goods imported from within the Empire. Canada took 33½ per cent. off British goods in 1897, and the system now applies to most parts of the Empire, wine and tobacco, for example, coming into England at lower duties than those charged on foreign goods.

IMPETIGO, a cutaneous eruption, generally in clusters, of yellow-scaled pustules, which grow thicker and larger, common among children ill fed and ill cared for.

IMPEY, SIR ELLIAH, Indian judge, born in Hammer-smith; educated at Cambridge, and called to the bar in 1766; was sent out to Bengal as first Chief Justice in 1774; he supported Warren Hastings' administration, and presided over the court which sentenced Nuncomar to death for forgery; in the quarrel over Hastings' alleged malversation he decided in favour of the governor; was recalled and impeached for his conduct of the Nuncomar trial in 1783, but was honourably acquitted; resigning in 1789, he sat in Parliament for New Romney till 1796 (1732-1809).

IMPRESSIONISM, a term in painting that denotes the principle of a new school originating in France before 1870, and introduced into this country some 10 years later; it is a revolt against traditionalism in art, and aims at reproducing on canvas not what the mind knows or by close study observes to be in nature, but the "impression" which eye and mind gather. The influence of the movement has been felt both here and in Germany.

IMPRESSMENT, legalised enforcement of service in the British navy, which has for years been in abeyance.

IMPROPRIATION, the transference of the revenues of a benefice to a layman or lay body to be devoted to spiritual uses.

IMPULSE, a term used in mechanics for the product of a force and the time for which it acts.

IMPUTATION, the theological doctrine of the transference of guilt or merit from one to another who is descended naturally or spiritually from the same stock as the former, as of Adam's guilt to us by nature or Christ's righteousness to us by faith; although in Scripture the term generally, if not always, denotes the reckoning to a man of the merit or the demerit involved in, not another's doings, but his own, as in a single act of faith or a single act of unbelief, the one viewed as allying him with all that is good, or as a proof of his essential goodness, and the other as allying him with all that is evil, or as a proof of his essential wickedness.

IN CENA DOMINI (i.e. in the Supper of the Lord), a papal bull promulgated in the Middle Ages, denouncing excommunication against all who dispute the claims of the Church, an edict the promulgation of which was felt on all hands to be intolerable; the promulgation has been discontinued since 1778.

INACCESSIBLE ISLAND, belongs to the Tristan D'Acunha group and is a mass of rock with a flat summit, almost square and about two miles long on each side. The highest point is 1840 ft. above the sea. It is the meeting place of myriads of penguins and other seaweal.

INCARNATION, the humanisation of the Divine in the person of Christ, a doctrine vehemently opposed in the early times of the Church by both Jews and Gnostics, by the former as inconsistent with the greatness of God, and by the latter as inconsistent with the imbed depravity of man.

INCENSE, a fragrance which arises from the burning of certain aromatic gums in connection with sundry religious observances, particularly in the Roman Catholic Church, as an expression of praise presumably well pleasing to God; a practice which Protestants repudiate as without warrant in Scripture.

INCHEALL, ELIZABETH, actress, dramatist, and novelist, daughter of John Simpson, a Suffolk farmer; came to London at the age of 18, seeking a theatrical engagement; after some adventures she met Joseph Luchbald, an actor of no note, to whom she was married in 1772; shortly afterwards she made her debut as Cordelia at Bristol; after seven years in the provinces and nine in London, during which she failed to rise high in her profession, she turned to literature; she wrote and adapted many plays, but the works by which she is remembered are two novels, "A Simple Story" and "Nature and Art" (1783-1821).

INCHEALP, JAMES LYLE MAUKAY, EARL OF, chairman of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Co. from 1894; he also has banking interests; he spent much of his early life in India, and was raised to the peerage in 1911 (1852-).

INCHCOLM, an island in the Firth of Forth, near Aberdeen, on the Fife coast, so called as the residence of St. Columba when engaged in the conversion of the Northern Picts; has the remains of an abbey founded by Alexander I. in 1123.

INCHEWETH, an island in the Firth of Forth, in the county of Fife, 2½ m. N. of Leith, and about ½ m. long, has a lighthouse with a revolving light, and fortifications to protect the Forth.

INCHTATUS, the horse of Caligula (a.e.); had a house and a servant to itself, was fed from vessels of gold, admitted to the priesthood, and created a consul of Rome.

INCUNEDON, CHARLES BENJAMIN, a celebrated ballad-singer with a fine tenor voice, born in Cornwall (1768-1826).

INCOME TAX, was introduced by William Pitt in 1798 to pay for the war with France; it was revived by Peel in 1842, and has since been a regular and increasing source of national revenue. Its rate is graded to give some relief to married men with families, and rises proportionately as incomes increase in size.

INCREMENT, UNEARNED, an expression denoting increase in the value of landed property due to increased demand and without any expenditure on the part of the proprietor.

INDEPENDENCE, DECLARATION OF, a declaration made July 4, 1776, by the North American States declaring their independence of Great Britain.

INDEPENDENCE, THE WAR OF, the name given to the struggle which the North American colonists maintained against the mother country, 1775-1783.

INDEPENDENCE DAY, a holiday observed throughout the United States annually on July 4 in celebration of the Declaration of Independence in 1776 that day.

INDEPENDENTS, or CONGREGATIONALISTS are a Protestant sect deriving both names from their principle of government; repudiating both Episcopacy and Presbyterianism, they hold that every congregation should manage its own affairs, and elect its own officers independent of all authority save that of Christ; they profess to derive all rules of faith and practice from the Scriptures, and are closely akin to Presbyterians in doctrine. Numerous as early as Queen Elizabeth's time, they suffered persecution then; many fled or were banished to Holland, whence the Mayflower conveyed the Pilgrim Fathers to New England in 1620. Regaining ascendancy under Cromwell, they again suffered at the Restoration; but political disabilities then imposed have gradually been removed, and now they are the most vigorous Dissenting body in England.

INDEX EXPURGATORIUS, a list of books issued by the Church of Rome, which, as hostile to her teaching, are placed under her ban, and are under penalties forbidden to be read. The first list published was by Pope Paul IV. in 1557, and in 1562 the Council of Trent appointed a committee whose special business it should be to draw up a complete list of obnoxious writings, a work which it fell to Paul IV. to finish after the sittings of the Council came to a close in an index issued in 1564.

INDIA, an Empire under British control, consisting of the great peninsula in the S. of Asia, which has the Bay of Bengal on the E. and the Arabian Sea on the W., and is separated from the mainland by the Hindu Kush and the Himalaya Mountains; politically the name includes besides the Punjab in the N. and Burma in the E.; the centre of the peninsula is a great plateau called the Deccan, between which and the snow-clad Himalayas stretch the great fertile basins of the Ganges, the Thar Desert, and the arid wastes of the Indus Valley; great varieties of climate are of course met with, but the temperature is prevalently high, and the monsoons of the Indian Ocean determine the regularity of the rainy season, which occurs from June to October; the country generally is insalubrious; the vegetation is correspondingly varied, but largely tropical; rice, cereal crops, sugar, and tobacco are generally grown; cotton in Bombay and the Central Provinces, opium in the Ganges Valley, Jute in Eastern Bengal, and indigo in Behar; coffee and tea are raised by Europeans in the hill country on virgin soil; the chief mineral deposits are extensive coalfields between the Ganges and the Godavari, the most valuable salt deposits in the world in the Punjab, and deposits of iron, the purist found anywhere, in many parts of the country, which, however, are wrought only by native methods; native manufactures are being largely superseded by European methods, and the young cotton-weaving industry flourishes well; the country is well populated on the whole, with a relative scarcity of big towns; the people belong to many different races, and speak languages representing four distinct stocks; the vast bulk of them are Brahmans or Hindus; there are many Mohammedans, Buddhists (in Burma), and Parsees (in Bombay); 2½ millions are Christians, and there are other religions; India has been subject to many conquests; the Aryan, Greek, and Mussulman invasions swept from the NW.; the Portuguese obtained a footing on the SW. coast in the 15th century; the victories of Plassey, 1757, and Seringapatam, 1799, established British rule throughout the whole peninsula, and the principle that native princes where they retained their thrones were vassals; Sind was won in 1843 and the Punjab in 1849, and the powers of the East India Company transferred to the Queen in 1857, who was proclaimed Empress in 1877; the government is vested in a Viceroy, aided by an executive and a legislative council, in which there is native representation, under control, however, of a Secretary of State for India and council at home; there are governors and lieutenant-governors of the presidencies of Madras and Bombay, and of the various provinces; native States are all attached to and subject to the supervision of the government of a province; there is a native army of 146,000 men, and 74,000 European troops are maintained in the country; British rule has developed the resources of the country, advanced its civilization, and contributed to the welfare of the people.

INDIA. (1) The Imperial Order of the Crown of, founded in 1878, includes the King and certain royal princes, English and Indian, female relatives of the Viceroy, of the governors of Bombay and Madras, and others in high places in India; ribbon, light blue with white edges; (2) The Most Exalted Order of the Star of, founded in 1861 and since enlarged, with the Sovereign for head and the Viceroy as grandmaster, and three different grades, designed severally G.C.S.I., K.C.S.I. (Knight), and C.S.I. (Companion), a blue ribbon with white stripes being the badge; and (3) The Most Excellent Order of the Empire, founded in 1878 and enlarged five times since, with the King at the head, and a knight-hood similar to the preceding, their motto, "Imperatrix auspiciis"; ribbon, purple.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE, a service which, besides embracing the ordinary departments of civil administration, includes judicial, medical, territorial, and even military staff appointments, appointments dependent on the possession of regulated, more or less academic, qualifications.

INDIAN MUTINY, a wide-spread rebellion on the part chiefly of the Sepoys against British authority in 1857; it was suppressed by a strong force under Sir Colin Campbell in 1858.

INDIAN OCEAN is that stretch of sea between Africa on the W. and Australia, Java, and Sumatra on the E., which separates in the N. into the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal; the monsoons, or trade-winds, blow here with great regularity; from April to October they are strong from the S.W., from October to April more gentle in the opposite direction; there are many islands and reefs of coral formation, such as the Maldivé group; St. Paul's and Mauritius are volcanic, while Madagascar and Ceylon are typical continental islands.

INDIAN TERRITORY, a stretch of country in the basin of the Arkansas, Canadian, and Red Rivers, with Kansas on the N., Arkansas on the E., Oklahoma Territory on the W., and separated by the Red River from Texas on the S., set apart for the occupation of the Indian tribes of the western prairies; formerly double its present size, it has been reduced by the purchase in 1890 of Oklahoma; in the centre and east are fertile plains and great forests of walnut and maple, in which deer and bears abound; the west is a treeless prairie supporting vast herds of cattle; mineral resources are probably rich, but are undeveloped; the principal tribes, Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, have their own organisations and civilised institutions, churches, schools, banks, and newspapers, but for many years past the Territory has been invaded by white settlers; the towns are small, Tahlequah, Lehigh, and M'Allister are the chief.

INDIANA, one of the smaller but most populous States of the U.S.A., lies between Lake Michigan and the Ohio River, with Ohio on the E. and Illinois on the W.; the climate is marked by extremes of heat and cold; the country is somewhat hilly in the S., is mostly level, well watered, and very fertile; agriculture is the chief industry, cereals, potatoes, and tobacco forming the chief crops; there is great mineral wealth, with extensive and varied industries, embracing iron, glass, and textile manufactures, wagon-building, and furniture-making; petroleum wells are abundant, and in one part of the territory natural gas is found in great quantities. First occupied by the French, Indiana was acquired by Britain in 1763, ceded to America 1783, and admitted to the Union in 1816; education in the State university and schools is free; besides Indianapolis, the capital, the largest towns are Evansville, Fort Wayne, and Terre Haute.

INDIANAPOLIS, capital of Indiana, on the White Ford River, in the centre of the State; a fine city, with wide, tree-lined streets, large iron, brass, and textile manufactures, and canned-meat industry; is a great railroad centre.

INDIANS, AMERICAN, the aborigines of America, who are gradually dying out; these aborigines were called Indians by Columbus, because when he discovered America he thought that it was India. See AMERICAN INDIANS.

INDIA-RUBBER, CAOUTCHOUC, or GUM ELASTIC, is a product of the milky juices of several tropical and subtropical plants found in the West Indies, Central and South America, West Africa, and India; there is evidence that its properties were partially known to the Spaniards in the West Indies early in the 17th century; but its first introduction to this country was about 1770, when it was employed by artists for erasing black-lead pencil marks, hence its familiar name; it is collected by making incisions in the tree trunk and gathering the slowly exuding juice, which is first solidified by drying, then purified by boiling and washing; it is flexible and elastic, insoluble in water, and impenetrable to gases and fluids, and these qualities give it great commercial importance; the use of pure rubber has been greatly superseded by that of "vulcanised" rubber; mixed with from 1 to 4 of its weight of sulphur and combined by heat, the rubber acquires greater elasticity, is not hardened by cold or rendered viscid by heat, and is insoluble in many of the solvents of pure rubber; its usefulness is thus largely increased and greatly extended of late; the demand for rubber is in excess of the supply, but no substitute has been found effective; in recent years care has been bestowed on its economical collection and on its scientific culture. Artificial rubber has been made from coprene; the process was used during the Great War, but owing to its cost cannot compete commercially with the natural product.

INDICTION, a cycle of 15 years instituted by Constantine the Great, for fiscal purposes, which began on September 24, 312, the day of his victory over Maximian; to find the indiction of any year add 1 and divide by 15.

INDIGO, a blue dye obtained from plants grown in India and the East Indies; the large trade in this dye has been considerably reduced by the developments in the manufacture of coal-tar dyes.

INDIUM, a metallic element of rare occurrence, first discovered in zinc-blende in 1863.

INDIVIDUALISM, the name given to a social system which has respect to the rights of the individual as sovereign, and is strictly opposed to Socialism.

INDO-CHINA, called also the Eastern Peninsula or Farther India, the name given to the large peninsular territory which lies between the Bay of Bengal and the Chinese Sea, lying almost wholly within the Torrid Zone, and embracing the empires of Burma and Annam and the kingdom of Cambodia and Siam, as well as territories under Britain and France, all now mostly divided between the latter two and Siam; it is sparsely peopled owing to its mountainous character and the swampy lands, and the natives are mainly of the Mongolian type.

INDO-EUROPEAN, an epithet applied to a family of the human race with the languages of its several members descended from the Aryans, and found dispersed over an area including the greater part of Asia and Europe.

INDORE, (1) a native principality, in Central India, somewhat larger than Wales, embraces the Vindhya and Satpura Mountains, and is traversed by the Nerbudda River; there are great forests on the mountains; the valley of the river is fertile; wheat, sugar, cotton, tobacco, and large quantities of opium are raised; the climate is sultry, and at certain seasons unhealthy; the natives are chiefly Mahatta Hindus; among the hills are Bhils and Gonds, the wildest tribes of India; the State is governed by a Maharajah styled Holkar, under supervision of an agent of the Governor-General; education is progressing. Indora, (2) on the Kuthi River, the capital, is a poor city of brick and mud; the palace and the British residency, however, are fine buildings; it is connected by rail with Bombay, distant 400 m. SW., and with Ajmere; it was the scene of a British massacre in 1857.

INDRA, the king of heaven and national god of the Aryans; gives victory to his people, and is always ready to aid them; he is pre-eminently a warlike god, and as he stands on his war-chariot, drawn by five fawn-coloured horses, he is in a sort the type of an Aryan chieftain; he is sometimes assisted by other gods, but he more frequently fights alone; he is the dispenser, moreover, of all good gifts, and the author and preserver of all living; his power extends over the heavens, and he holds the earth in the hollow of his hand; is the Siva of the Hindus.

INDUCTANCE, the effect on the current flowing in a coil caused by the magnetic field set up by the current (self-inductance) or by the current in a neighbouring coil (mutual inductance); the inductance of a coil adds to its resistance to an alternating current, such resistance being called the reactance; the unit of inductance is the henry (q.v.).

INDUCTION, the name given to the logical process by which from a study of particular instances we arrive at a general principle or law. The term is also applied to an electric or magnetic effect produced without direct contact and equal to the cause, being essentially its reproduction.

INDUCTION COIL, an apparatus consisting of two coaxial coils; through one (the primary) flows a continuous current which is interrupted several times per second by a "make-and-break" device, giving rise to an alternating current in the other coil (the secondary) of high voltage.

INDULGENCE, remission by Church authority of the guilt of a sin on the penitent confession of the sinner to a priest, which, according to Roman Catholic theology, the Church is enabled to dispense out of the inexhaustible treasury in reserve of the merits of Christ.

INDUS, a great river of India, 1800 m. long; rises in Tibet, on the N. of the Himalayas, flows NW. through Cashmere, then SW. through the Punjab and Sind to the sea; its upper course is through great gorges and very rapid, but after the entrance of the Kabul River its way lies through arid plains, and it is navigable; after receiving the five rivers of the Punjab—the Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej—its volume decreases through evaporation and the sinking of some of the many streams into which it divides in the sand; on one of the branches of the delta stands the thriving port of Karachi.

INERT GASES, name given to the gases helium, neon, argon, krypton, xenon, and radon (or radon), which are found in small quantities in the atmosphere and form no compounds with other elements.

INERTIA, that property of a body in virtue of which it remains in a state of rest or of motion with constant velocity in a straight line, unless it is compelled to change that state by an external force; the idea of inertia is implicit in Newton's First Law of Motion.

INEZ DE CASTRO. See CASTRO.

INFALLIBILITY, freedom from all error in the past and from all possibility of error in the future, as claimed by the Church of Rome. This claim extends to all matters of faith, morals, and discipline in the Church, and is based on an interpretation of Matt. xvi. 18, xviii. 19; Eph. iv. 11-16 and other passages. It is held that the Church is incapable of embracing any false doctrine from whatever quarter suggested, and that she is guided by the Divine Spirit in actively opposing heresy, in teaching all necessary truth, and in deciding all relative matters of controversy. Infallibility is not claimed in connection with matters of fact, science, or general opinion. The seat of infallibility has been much disputed even in the Roman Catholic Church itself, and the infallibility of the Pope was only decreed so recently as the Vatican Council in 1870. It was always agreed that where the Pope and Bishops were unanimous they were infallible, and their unanimity might be expressed either in a general council or in a decree of a local council tacitly accepted by the Pope and the rest of the Church, or even in a decree of the Pope alone if the bishops either expressly or tacitly affirmed it. But the Vatican Council decided "that when the Roman Pontiff speaks ex cathedra—that is, when he, using his office as pastor and doctor of all Christians, in virtue of his apostolic office, defines a doctrine of faith and morals to be held by the whole Church—he by the Divine assistance, promised to him by the blessed Peter, possesses that infallibility with which the Divine Redeemer was pleased to invest His Church in the definition of doctrine in faith or morals, and that therefore such definitions of the Roman Pontiff are irrefragable in their own nature and not because of the consent of the Church." The Greek Church puts forward a moderate claim to inerrancy, holding that as a matter of fact those councils which she regards as oecumenical have not erred in their decrees affecting faith and morals.

INFANTE, INFANTA, the titles given respectively to the royal princes and princesses of Spain and Portugal, corresponding to the mediæval title of "childe" and signifying a knight.

INFERI, the name given by the Latins to the nether world and the gods of it.

INFERNO, the hell of Dante, represented as included in nine circles, of which the first six, constituting the uppermost hell, are occupied by those who cannot govern themselves and have no mind to harm any one else, of which the seventh, constituting the mid-hell, is occupied by those who cannot govern their thoughts, and of which the eighth and ninth, constituting the nether hell, are occupied by those who have wilfully done harm to other people, those in the eighth in hot blood and those in the ninth or lowest in cold blood, the former in passion and the latter without passion, far down below the freezing-point. See Ruskin's "Fors Clavigera" for fuller particulars.

INFLECTION, the name given to the changes in the end of words to indicate relations, not so common in English—being usually expressed among us by prepositions—as in Latin, Greek, and other languages, but occurring in English as king's, mine, ours, to indicate possession; inflection in nouns is called declension, and in verbs conjugation.

INFLUENZA, an epidemic disease, closely resembles, but is quite distinct from, cold in the head. It is characterised by early and marked debility and depression; though usually of short duration, attacks must not be disregarded; fatal results often ensue on carelessness. Convalescence is slow, and complications may ensue. The cause of the malady is obscure; sporadic cases always occur, but from time to time great epidemics of this disease have travelled westward over the world. Their movement seems to depend on atmospheric conditions, but is independent of the season of the year and often contrary to the direction of the wind. One of the severest epidemics in Great Britain was in 1918.

INFRA RED RAYS, invisible heat rays of longer wave-length than the longest visible rays of the spectrum, the red; first observed by Herschel in the solar spectrum in 1800; glass is opaque to these rays.

INFRA LAPSIANS, those Calvinists who believe that election and predestination are subsequent to the Fall, while the Supralapsarians believe that the ordinations are as old as eternity.

INFUSORIA, a name given to certain classes of animalcula or protozoa engendered in stagnant water infused with decaying organic matter.

INGE, VERY REV. W. RALPH, English theologian and writer. He had a brilliant career at Cambridge, and in 1911 was made Dean of St. Paul's, favouring the modernist side in the Church, and gaining among the public the nickname "gloomy Dean" by reason of some of his pessimistic views; works on religion and philosophy have appeared from his pen (1860-).

INGELOW, JEAN, poetess and novelist, born in Boston, Lincolnshire, died at Kensington; her earliest work appeared anonymously, but a volume of verses under her name was successful in 1863; her poetry is chiefly religious and devotional; later she wrote for children; subsequently she turned to novels, and produced besides several others. "Off the Skelligs" in 1872; she will be remembered for her ballad "High Tide on the Coast of Lincolnshire," and a song "Supper at the Mill" (1820-1897).

INGEMANN, BERNHARD SEVERIN, a Danish poet and novelist; in the latter regard took Scott for his model, his subjects being historical; was a man of varied literary ability (1780-1862).

INGLEBY, CLEMENT MANFIELD, Shakespearean scholar, born near Birmingham, passed from Cambridge, where he graduated in 1847, to practice as a solicitor, but abandoned law for literature in 1859; his early works were of a philosophical nature, but he is best known as the author of a long series of works on Shakespearean subjects, of which "The Shakespeare Fabrications" was the first, and "Shakespeare: the Man and the Book" the chief; he was a Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature (1823-1896).

INGLIS, SIR JAMES, a Fifeshire gentleman, who in the reign of James IV. distinguished himself against the English and was knighted; author of "Complaint of Scotland" d. 1554.

INGLIS, SIR JOHN, English general; entered the army at 19, served in Canada in 1837; was sent to India, and distinguished himself in the Punjab in 1848; at the outbreak of the Mutiny was stationed at Lucknow, where he heroically defended the residency for 87 days till the relief of the city by Havelock and Outram (1814-1892).

INGLIS, SIR ROBERT HARRY, Conservative statesman, opposed every Liberal measure of the period, from that of Catholic Emancipation to the Abolition of the Corn Laws (1786-1855).

INGOLDSBY, THOMAS, the pseudonym of Rev. Richard Barham (q.v.), author of "Ingoldsby Legends," a collection of humorous tales in verse.

INGOLSTADT, a Bavarian town and fortress on the Danube, 60 m. N. of Munich, has many ancient associations; once the seat of a university; its manufactures now are beer, cannon, gunpowder; salt is mined in the vicinity.

INGRAHAM, JOSEPH HOLT, author of "The Prince of the House of David," born in Portland, Maine; after some years spent at sea, became a teacher of languages in Mississippi, and was ordained Episcopal clergyman in 1855; prior to his ordination he wrote stories of adventure, "Captain Kyd," &c., but subsequently confined himself to Biblical subjects (1800-1860).

INGRAM, RT. REV. ARTHUR FOLEY WINNINGTON, English cleric and theologian. Serving first as chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield, he became rector of Bethnal Green in 1895, a canon of St. Paul's in 1897, and Bishop of London in 1901; from his early days he was actively associated with the High Church party (1858-).

INGRES, JEAN DOMINIQUE AUGUSTE, a great French painter, born in Montauban; studied in Paris; in 1806 went to Rome, and 14 years after to Florence, but became professor of Fine Arts at the Academy in Paris in 1824; wounded by hostile criticisms, he left Paris for Rome again in 1834, where he became Director of the French Academy in Rome; in 1841 he returned to Paris, where he died; he followed his master David in his choice of classical subjects, but his work met with varied reception, now favourable, now the reverse; the "Portrait of Cherubini," and other pictures, however, won for him great admiration in his later days; he was made a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour (1781-1867).

INGULPH, abbot of Croyland, long credited with the authorship of a history of the monastery, which has since been proved to be a fabrication of a later date, of probably the 13th or 14th century; he was appointed abbot in 1086; d. 1109.

INKERMANN, a small Tartar village E. of Sebastopol harbour; the scene of a battle between the Russians and allied forces, to the defeat of the former after a prolonged struggle on November 5, 1854.

INNER TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

INNES, COSMO, lawyer and antiquary, born in Durris,

Antiquities," and "Sketches of Early Scotch History" (1798-1874).

INNES, THOMAS (Father Innes), Scottish historian, born in Aberdeenshire, educated at Paris; became a priest in 1692; after three years' service in Banffshire he returned to Paris, where he held a scholastic appointment till his death; in politics a Jacobite, in religious matters he had leanings to the Jansenist heresy; a diligent student of Scottish history, he produced the earliest scientific Scotch-historical works; his "Critical Essay on the Ancient Inhabitants of Scotland" and "Civil and Ecclesiastical History of Scotland" (unfinished), display honesty and penetration (1662-1744).

INNISFAHL (Innis Fodhla, Isle of destiny), an ancient name of Ireland.

INNOCENT, the name of 18 Popes: Innocent I., Pope from 402 to 417; Innocent II., Pope from 1180 to 1143; Innocent III., Pope from 1198 to 1216; Innocent IV., Pope from 1243 to 1254; Innocent V., Pope in 1276; Innocent VI., Pope from 1352 to 1362, resided at Avignon; Innocent VII., Pope from 1404 to 1406; Innocent VIII., Pope from 1484 to 1492; Innocent IX., Pope in 1591; Innocent X., Pope from 1644 to 1655, condemned Jansenism; Innocent XI., Pope from 1676 to 1689; Innocent XII., Pope from 1691 to 1700; Innocent XIII., Pope from 1721 to 1724; of these there were two of note.

INNOCENT III., the greatest of the name, born in Arragon; succeeded Celestine III.; extended the territorial power of the Church, and made nearly all Christendom subject to its sway, essayed the recovery of Palestine, and promoted a crusade against the Albigenses; excommunicated Otto IV., emperor of Germany; put England under an interdict, and deposed King John; was zealous for the purity as well as supremacy of the Church, and countenanced every movement that contributed to enhance its influence and stereotype its beliefs as well as its forms of worship, transubstantiation among the one and sacrilegious confession among the other; though harsh, and even cruel, to those whom he conceived to be the enemies of the faith, he was personally a man of blameless life, and did much to reform the morals of the clergy (circ. 1160-1216).

INNOCENT XI., succeeded Clement X., is celebrated for his contest with Louis XIV., and as giving occasion thereby to a protest of the Gallican clergy, and a declaration on their part of what is known as the Gallican Liberties (q.v.), and for a further contest he had with Louis in regard to certain immunities claimed, to the scandal of the Church, by foreign ambassadors residing in Rome, an interference which Louis resented on behalf of his representatives among them, but, as it happened, in vain (1611-1689).

INNOCENTS, THE HOLY FEAST OF, a festival celebrated in the Western Church on December 28 and in the Eastern on the 29th, to commemorate the slaughter by Herod of the children at Bethlehem from two years old and under, who have from the earliest times been included among the holy martyrs of the Church.

INNS OF COURT, are four voluntary societies—Lincoln's Inn, the Inner and the Middle Temple, and Gray's Inn—with whom rests the exclusive right to call men to the English bar; they provide lectures and hold examinations in law, and they have discretionary powers to refuse admission to the bar or to expel and disqualify persons of unsuitable character from it; each Inn possesses considerable property, a dining-hall, library, and chapel, and is subject to the jurisdiction of a self-elective body of Benchers, who are usually judges or senior counsel; these societies originated in the 13th century, when the practice of law passed out of the hands of the clergy.

INNSBRUCK, on the Inn, at the head of the Brenner Pass, 100 m. S. of Munich; is the capital of the Austrian Tyrol, an ancient and beautiful town, rich in art treasures, with a university and manufactures of woollen cloth, glass ware, and stained glass.

INO, the daughter of Cadmus and Harmonia, the wife of Athamas, king of Thebes, who was changed into a sea-deity as she fled for refuge from her husband, who had gone raving mad and sought her life.

INOCULATION is the introduction of disease germs into the system, usually by puncture of the skin or hypodermic injection; many diseases so introduced assume a mild form, and render the subject not liable to the severe form. Inoculation for smallpox, the virus being taken from actual smallpox pustules, was practised by the ancient Brahmins and by the Chinese 800 years before Christ, and its practice continued in the East. It was introduced to this country from Turkey in 1717, and extensively practised until superseded by Jenner's discovery of vaccination at the end of the century, and finally prohibited by law in 1840. Inoculation has been found successful in the prevention of other diseases, notably anthrax, hydrophobia, malaria, and typhoid.

INQUISITION, an ecclesiastical tribunal established by the Roman Catholic Church in 1232 by Pope Gregory IX., and re-organised in 1248 under Pope Innocent IV., and set up successively in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the S. of France, for the trial and punishment of heretics; the Inquisition established in Spain achieved the greatest notoriety from the number of victims it sacrificed, and the remorseless tortures to which they were subjected, both when under examination to extort confession and after conviction. The rigour of its action began to abate in the 17th century, but it was not till 1835, after frequent attempts to limit its power and suppress it, that it was abolished in Spain. Napoleon suppressed it in France in 1808, and after an attempted revival from 1814 to 1820, its operations there came to an end. St. Dominic (q.v.) has the credit of having invented the institution by the zeal which animated him for the orthodoxy of the Church, one of his order, Torquemada, later making his name infamous by his cruelty.

INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES. According to one view the Scriptures are throughout verbally inspired, and every word in them dictated by the Spirit of God; according to another, though they are not verbally inspired, they contain a record of divine things written under divine inspiration; according to a third, though not written under divine inspiration in any part, they contain a faithful record of a divine revelation; and according to a fourth, they contain a record merely of what a succession of God-fearing men in sympathy with each other and their race saw and felt to be the clear purpose of God in His providence of the world.

INSPIRED IDIOT. Horace Walpole's name for Oliver Goldsmith.

INSTITUTE OF FRANCE was established by the Directory in 1795, to take the place of the four academies suppressed by the Convention two years previously. In 1816 Louis XVIII. gave back the old names to its four sections, viz. L'Académie Française, L'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-lettres, L'Académie des Sciences, and L'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques. Each academy has its own separate organisation and work, and participates besides in the advantages of the common library, archives, and funds. Election, which is in every case subject to government confirmation, is by ballot, and every member receives an annual salary of at least 1500 francs. Government votes a sum of money annually to the Institute. Members of the French Academy have special duties and privileges, and in some cases special remuneration. They allot every year prizes for eloquence and poetry; a prize "to the poor Frenchman who has done the most virtuous action throughout the year," and one to the Frenchman who has written and published the book most conducive to good morals. Membership in the Académie Française is strictly limited to 40 Frenchmen. The others have, besides, from 40 to 70 members each, also Associate, foreign and corresponding, members. The Institute centralises the pursuit of all branches of knowledge and art, and has been the model of similar national institutes in Madrid, Lisbon, Stockholm, and Leningrad.

INSTITUTES OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION, a celebrated work of Calvin in exposition of the doctrines of the French Protestants, hence called Calvinists in France. See CALVIN.

INSULATOR, a non-conductor of electricity (e.g. glass, mica, porcelain, &c.) used to prevent a leakage in an electrical circuit.

INSULIN, a secretion of the pancreas, which enables the body to assimilate sugar; a deficiency of it gives rise to diabetes; insulin from animals is injected as a treatment for this disease.

INSURANCE, NATIONAL, the compulsory system under which weekly payments by employers and employees bring the latter benefits in the event of sickness or unemployment. Lloyd George introduced the system in 1911, and after considerable opposition it became law the following year.

INTAGLIO, name given to a gem with a design incised in the surface.

INTERFERENCE, the optical effect produced at a point by the coincidence of two wave trains which differ in phase.

INTERLAKEN, a small town, a pretty place, on the Aar, in Switzerland, "between the lakes" Thun and Brienz; it is near to some of the finest Swiss scenery, and is a famous health resort, visited annually by tourists.

INTERNATIONAL, THE, a secret socialistic organisation, the outcome of the teaching of Karl Marx, which, though it has changed its name, has widespread ramifications throughout Europe, the object of which appears to be the emancipation of labour, and the assertion everywhere of the sovereign rights of the working-man, to the extinction of all merely national and class interests. There is a Moscow International and an Amsterdam International, to one or other of which most of the Labour and Socialist parties of the world are affiliated.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE, an offshoot of the League of Nations for dealing with international labour statistics and similar matters, having its headquarters at Geneva.

INTERNAL COMBUSTION ENGINE, an engine in which the fuel is consumed in the cylinder itself, e.g. petrol engines, as used for motor-cars and aeroplanes, gas engines, and heavy oil engines, such as the Diesel (q.v.).

INTUSSUSCEPTION, a displacement of the bowel, in which a higher portion becomes folded or telescoped into a lower; is a frequent cause of obstruction, and a serious, though not always fatal, condition; the term is also applied to the process by which nutriment is absorbed and becomes part of the system.

INVALIDES, HÔTEL DES, an institution in Paris, founded by Louis XIV. in 1674, for retired court servants and invalided soldiers; the church, the nave of which is adorned with military trophies, is surmounted by a majestic dome, under which the remains of Napoleon were deposited in 1840.

INVAR, an alloy of steel with 36 per cent. of nickel; its thermal expansion is negligible, being but one-thirtieth that of platinum.

INVERARAY, county town of Argyllshire, on the NW. shore of Loch Fyne, close to which is the castle, the residence of the Duke of Argyll.

INVERNESS, county town of Inverness-shire and capital of the Northern Highlands, is situated on the Ness, near the Moray Firth, amid picturesque surroundings, is rich in interesting memories; has important public institutions, several manufactures, and a considerable trade; the inhabitants are distinguished for the purity of their English.

INVERNESS-SHIRE, the largest county in Scotland, stretches from the Moray Firth to the Atlantic, and includes many islands, Skye, the Outer Hebrides (except Lewis), and others; it embraces a large part of the Highlands, is very mountainous, has many glens and lochs, but little fertile land; there are large deer forests, grouse moors, and sheep runs; Ben Nevis, the highest mountain in the British Isles (4406 ft.), is in this county.

INVERTASE, an enzyme whose catalytic action causes the hydrolysis of cane sugar to fructose and glucose, the first process in the fermentation of sugar for the preparation of alcohol.

IO, in the Greek mythology a daughter of Inachos (q.v.), beloved by Zeus, whom Hera out of jealousy changed into a heifer and set the hundred-eyed Argus to watch, but when Zeus had by Hermes slain the watcher, Hera sent a gadfly to goad her over the world, over which she reared distractedly till she reached Egypt, where Osiris married her, and was in association with him worshipped as Isis.

IODINE, a non-metallic element originally obtained from kelp, but now found in South America in combination with sodium, used largely both free and in combination in medicine and surgery, and in photography.

IODOPHORM, a crystalline substance similar to chloroform in composition, only in it iodine takes the place of chlorine; it is used in surgery as an antiseptic.

IOLAIUS, a town in Thessaly, the port from which the Argonauts sailed in quest of the Golden Fleece.

ION, in the Greek mythology son of Apollo by Creusa, and exposed by her in the cave where she bore him, but was conveyed by the god to Delphi and educated by a priestess, and was afterwards owned by his mother, and became the ancestor of the Ionians, her husband, Xuthus, being kept throughout in ignorance of his fate.

ION, the name given to an atom or molecule which has gained or lost one or more electrons; most salts on solution in water are broken up into ions with opposite charges, a phenomenon utilised in the process of electrolysis and electroplating, and in the electric battery.

IONA, a fertile little island $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. of Mull, where St. Columba landed from Ireland A.D. 563, and built a monastery which was for centuries the centre of ecclesiastical life and missionary enterprise among the Scots of Scotland and Ireland and the Angles of the N. of England. The abbey church, later the cathedral, dating from the 12th century, has been restored and reopened for service. The island is $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. long and $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad.

IONIA, ancient name of the western districts of Asia Minor between the Hellespont and the Maeander, with adjacent islands; was colonised by Greeks 1050 B.C., and its chief cities, including Miletus, Ephesus, Samos, Chios, and later Smyrna, formed the Ionian League; the Ionians were noted for wealth, art, and luxury; coming under Persian yoke in 547 B.C. they deserted to Greece 479 B.C. in the great war, and became again independent; from 387 B.C. they were again under Persia till Alexander the Great took them and merged their history in that of the surrounding peoples.

IONIAN ISLANDS, a chain of forty mountainous islands lying off the W. coast of Greece, the largest being Corfu, Santa Maura, Cephalonia, and Zante. The climate is good, and there is much fertile soil in the valleys except in Cephalonia; corn, grapes, and currants are grown; sulphur and coal are found in Corfu; their history has been very chequered; after belonging at different times to Venice, France, and Turkey, they were seized by Britain and constituted a dependency in 1815; never satisfied with British rule, they were a source of constant friction which Gladstone's mission in 1859 was insufficient to allay, and were handed over to Greece in 1868.

IONIC ORDER, an order of Grecian architecture, characterised by the volute of its capital in the form of a ram's horn, and with the cornice dentated, the shaft fluted, and the entablature plain or embellished.

IONIC SCHOOL, the name of the earliest of the schools of philosophy in Greece, the prominent members of which were natives of Ionia, one and all of whom traced the beginning or basis of things back to the action of some physical agent, such as water, air, fire, &c., and among whom are reckoned such men as Thales, Anaximander, Anaximenes, and Heraclitus.

IONIUM, a radioactive element of the uranium series discovered by Boltwood in 1907; it emits an alpha particle and changes into radium (q.v.).

IOWA, one of the United States, on the right bank of the Mississippi River, with Minnesota to the N. and Missouri to the S., and the Missouri River on its western border; is well watered, very fertile, and, though liable to extremes of temperature, very healthy; agriculture flourishes, the country being an undulating plain and most of the soil being arable; cereals and root crops are raised, cattle bred; there are poultry and dairy farms; coal, gypsum, and lead are mined; manufactures include mill products, canned meats, and agricultural implements; general education in the State is advanced. State policy in this respect being liberal; Iowa was admitted to the Union, 1846; Des Moines is the capital; Iowa is the seat of the State University and of some flour-mills and factories.

IPHIGENIA, a famous Athenian general, the son of a shoemaker, celebrated throughout Greece for his defeat of the Spartans in 392, as well as for other great military exploits, for which he was rewarded by his countrymen with almost unprecedented honour; d. 344 B.C.

IPHIGENIA, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra; her father having killed a favourite deer belonging to Artemis in Aulis as he was setting out for Troy, the goddess was offended, and Calchas (q.v.), when consulted, told him she could only be appeased by the sacrifice of his daughter; this he proceeded to do, but as he was preparing to offer her up the goddess descended in a cloud, carried her off to Tauris, and made her a priestess in her temple. The story has been dramatised by Euripides, Racine, and Goethe.

IPSEUS, a small town in Phrygia, the scene of a great contest between the generals of Alexander for succession to the empire.

IPSWICH, a town in Suffolk, on the Orwell, 12 m. from the sea; is an old town and has a number of interesting, as well as some old-fashioned, buildings; it is well provided with churches and educational establishments, and was the birthplace of Cardinal Wolsey; manufactures agricultural implements, and exports besides these leather, oil, coke, and agricultural produce.

IQUIQUE, important seaport in the N. of Chile; exports nitrates, iodine, and silver.

IRAN, the ancient name or plateau of Asia, extending N. and S. between the Hindu Kush and the Persian Gulf, and E. and W. between the Indus and Kurdistan; inhabited by the Aryans; is the official name for Persia.

IRANIAN, the inhabitants of Iran, a people constituting an important branch of the Indo-European family, including the Persians and Medes.

IRAQ, MESOPOTAMIA, the area between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, believed by some to have been the site of the garden of Eden. Bordered by Kurdistan, Syria and the Persian Gulf, it has an area of some 150,000 sq. m. Freed from Turkish rule during the Great War, the country was mandated by the League of Nations to Great Britain; King Faisal was appointed to rule in 1921, and the monarch is assisted in Government by a democratically elected Chamber of Deputies. Baghdad is the capital and chief city. The raising of wheat, barley, and cereals is the main occupation of the people, hampered until irrigation schemes are developed, and cotton could be extensively grown, while there are potential oil supplies.

IRAWADI, or IRRAWADDY, a river, navigable throughout its whole course, formed by the union of two streams from the mountains of Tibet; flows S. through Burma 700 miles, passing Mandalay and falling into the Bay of Bengal in a delta, on one branch of which stands Rangoon.

IRELAND, an island rather more than half the size of and lying to the west of England and Wales, from which it is divided by the North Channel (13 m. wide), the Irish Sea (140 m.), and the St. George's Channel (50 m.). Politically it is divided into the province of N. Ireland, set up in 1920, and the Irish Free State (q.v.), a self-governing dominion established in 1922; the former consists of Belfast, Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry, and Tyrone, with Belfast as its capital; Dublin is the capital of the Irish Free State which comprises the remainder of the island. Geographically Ireland consists of a large undulating plain in the centre, containing extensive bogs, several large loughs—Neagh, the Erne, Allen, Derg, drained by the rivers Shannon, Barrow, Liffey, and Boyne, and surrounded on almost all sides by maritime highlands, of which three on the SW., NW., and E. are the highest. The N. and W. coasts are rugged and much indented. The climate is milder, more equable, and somewhat more rainy than that of England; but the cereal and green crops are the same. Flax is grown in the N. The tendency is to revert to pasture, however, agriculture being generally in a backward state. Unfavourable land-laws, small holdings, and want of capital have told heavily against the Irish peasantry. Fisheries are declining. The chief manufacture is linen in Belfast and other Ulster towns. Irish exports consist of dairy produce, cattle, and linen, and are chiefly to Great Britain. Primary education is largely supported by government grants; there are many excellent schools and colleges; the chief universities are Dublin and the Royal (an examining body only). In Ulster the Protestants slightly outnumber the Roman Catholics, in all other parts the Roman Catholics are in a vast majority. Ireland was occupied by Iberian peoples in prehistoric times; these were conquered and absorbed by Celtic tribes; many kingdoms were set up, and strife and confusion prevailed. There was Christianity in the island before St. Patrick crossed from Strathclyde in the 5th century. Invasions by Danes, 8th to 10th centuries, and conquest by Normans under Henry II. 1162-1172, fomented the national disquiet. Under Tudor and Stuart rule the history of the country is a long story of faction and feud among the chiefs and nobles, of rebellions, expeditions, massacres, and confiscations. Sympathy with the Stuarts brought on the scourge of Cromwell (1649) and the invasion by William III. Thereafter the penal laws excluded Roman Catholics from Parliament. The union of the Irish with the British Parliament took place in 1801. Catholic disabilities were removed 1829. An agitation for the repeal of the Union was begun in 1842 by Daniel O'Connell, and carried on by the Fenian movement of 1847 and the Home Rule movement led by Charles Parnell. A Home Rule bill was lost in the Commons in 1886, and another in the Lords in 1893; bills of 1912 and 1913 met a similar fate, but one was passed in 1914, though inoperative till after the Great War, when owing to the attitude of the South it was not enforced; civil war lasted till a treaty was signed establishing the Free State, Northern Ireland remaining part of the United Kingdom with Home Rule. N. Ireland is governed by a governor, senate, and House of Commons, and the Irish Free State by a governor-general, a senate, and a lower chamber called the Dail (q.v.). The Church of Ireland (Protestant Episcopal) was disestablished in 1871.

IRELAND, SAMUEL WILLIAM HENRY, a notorious forger of Shakespearean relics, born in London, son of a dealer in old books and prints; imposed on his father and a number of lovers of the antique, till he was exposed by Malone; he published a confession of his forgeries, and died in obscurity and poverty (1777-1885).

IRENEUS, one of the Fathers of the Church; was bishop of Lyons, and suffered martyrdom about 202; had been a disciple of Polycarp; wrote against the Gnostics in a work in Greek, of which only a few fragments in Latin remain.

IRENE, the daughter of Zeus and Themis, the Greek goddess of peace; she was an object of worship both in Athens and Rome, is represented as holding in her left arm a cornucopia, and in her right hand an olive branch.

IRENE, empress of Constantinople, born in Athens, a poor orphan girl, famous for her beauty, her talents, and her crimes; was banished to Lesbos, where she maintained herself by spinning; has been canonized by the Greek Church for her zeal in image worship (752-803).

IRETON, HENRY, born in Alenborough, Notts.; graduated at Cambridge 1629, and studied law; on outbreak of Civil War he joined the Parliamentary party, and marrying Cromwell's daughter, Bridget, acquired great influence; took a leading part in the prosecution of the king, was one of his judges, and signed the warrant for his execution; kept by Cromwell in Ireland in 1650, he proved a stern deputy, and died of the plague before Limerick; he was a man of great vigour of character, whose zeal for justice made him almost cruel (1611-1651).

IRIDIUM, a metallic element of rare occurrence found in the ores of platinum, which it resembles in its properties; it forms useful alloys, e.g. with osmium, for tipping gold pen-nibs; the platinum standards of weight contain 10 per cent of iridium.

IRIS, the daughter of Thaumas (i.e. wonder) and of the ocean nymph Electra (i.e. splendour); was the goddess of the rainbow, and as such the messenger of the gods, particularly of Zeus and Hera, the appearance of the rainbow being regarded as a sign that communications of good omen were passing between heaven and earth, as it was to Noah that they would continue to be kept up; she is represented as dressed in a long, white tunic, over which hangs a light upper garment, and with golden wings on her shoulders.

IRISH BOUNDARY DISPUTE, a dispute between N. Ireland and the Irish Free State which arose after the Irish Treaty which set up the Free State. The treaty provided for a commission of three with a neutral chairman to fix the frontier between the countries, and as N. Ireland refused to appoint a representative a special Act was passed appointing one for her. The commission met in 1924, toured Ireland and prepared its report. Before its publication, however, Cosgrave and Craig reached a compromise whereby the frontier remained unchanged.

IRISH FREE STATE, a British dominion which began its existence officially in 1922. It is governed by a governor-general, a senate, and chamber of deputies called the Dail, elected by universal adult suffrage. Irish is the official language, and instead of a Prime Minister it has a President of the Executive Council. Dublin is the capital, and the dominion embraces the provinces of Leinster, Munster, and Connaught, and the Ulster counties of Cavan, Donegal, and Monaghan. Agriculture is the chief industry, pork, potatoes, and butter being the main products. The population is predominantly Catholic.

IRISH TREATY, THE, an agreement between the British Government and the leaders of Sinn Fein signed on Dec. 6, 1921. In 1920 the Government of Ireland Act had conferred Home Rule on Southern Ireland, but Sinn Fein had rejected the offer, made war on England, and continued to fight until Lloyd George's cabinet gave way to most of their demands in 1921, which established the Irish Free State (q.v.).

IRKUTSK, a central Siberian province, separated from China by the Sayan Mountains; it has Lake Baikal on the E., Yenisei and Yakutsk on the W. and N.; a rich pastoral country, watered by the navigable rivers Angara and the Lena, agriculture, cattle rearing are prosperous industries; there are gold, iron, and salt mines; one-third of the population are forced colonists; the capital, Irkutsk, is the seat of government for Eastern Siberia, an ecclesiastical centre, and the chief emporium of commerce; it is the finest city in Siberia.

IRMIN, a Teutonic tribal deity; was honoured by wooden pillars with his image on the top, greatly revered by the people; the constellation "The Plough" was known as "Irmin's Chariot."

IRON AGE, the last of the three stages, stone, bronze, iron, which mark the prehistoric development of most now civilised peoples; these occurred at different periods, and were of different duration in different areas; they are named from the material employed in making cutting instruments and weapons; the forms of instruments are freer than in the bronze period, and rectilinear gives places to free curvilinear decoration; this age is marked, too, by the introduction of writing and the beginning of literary and historic records. See AGES.

IRON CITY, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, so named from its numerous ironworks.

IRON CROWN, the crown of the ancient Lombard kings, a golden circlet studded with jewels, and so called as enclosing a ring of iron said to have been one of the nails of the cross, beaten out; Napoleon had it brought from Monza, and crowned himself with it as king of Italy. It is now in Vienna.

IRON DUKE, Duke of Wellington, from his iron will. It is surmised.

IRON GATE, the name given to dangerous rapids in the Danube at Orsova, as it issues out of Hungary.

IRON HAND, Goetz von Berlichingen (q.v.).

IRON MASK, MAN WITH THE, a prisoner who in the reign of Louis XIV. wore, when he was transferred from prison to prison, what seemed an iron mask to prevent any one discovering and revealing his identity, over which to this day there hangs an impenetrable veil; he is reported to have been young and of noble form, and the conclusion is that he was a man of distinction; while alleged by some to have been of Royal descent (as in Dumas' romances), many investigators place him as one Mattholi, an Italian diplomatic agent who offended the French king Louis.

IRON ORES are those minerals composed of oxides and sulphides of iron, which are capable of yielding the metal on the commercial scale; the chief ores are magnetite and hematite.

IRONCLADS were originally wooden vessels protected by iron plates; they were used at the siege of Gibraltar in 1782; the French had them in the Crimean War, and in 1858 built four iron-plated line-of-battle ships; in 1860 England built the Warrior, an iron steam battleship with 4½-inch plates; since then new types have succeeded each other very quickly; the modern ironclad is built of steel and armed with steel plates sometimes 18 ins. thick; the result is now applied to all armoured vessels, whether battleships or cruisers.

IRONIDES, Cromwell's troopers, a thousand strong, and raised by him in the Eastern counties of England, so called at first from the invincibility displayed by them at Marston Moor; were selected by Cromwell "as men," he said, "that had the fear of God before them, and made conscience of what they did. . . . They were never beaten," he added, "and wherever they were engaged against the enemy, they beat continually."

IRONY is a subtle figure of speech in which, while one thing is said, some indication serves to show that quite the opposite is meant; thus apparent praise becomes severe condemnation or ridicule; practical irony is evinced in ostensibly furthering some one's hopes and wishes while really leading him to his overthrow. Life and history are full of irony in the contrast between ambitions and their realisation.

IRONY, SOCRATIC, the name given to a practice of Socrates with pretentious people; "affecting ignorance and pretending to solicit information, he was in the habit of turning round upon the scholar and confounding his presumption, both by his unlooked-for consequences he evoked by his incessant questions and by the glaring contradictions the other was in the end lulled by his admissions."

IROQUOIS, one of the most intelligent branches of the North American Indians, comprised a confederation of five, afterwards six, tribes, among whom the leading place was taken by the Mohawks; their territory lay inland in what is now New York State and the basin of the St. Lawrence. Numbering some 25,000, they maintained their own against the hereditary foes by whom they were surrounded; they took kindly to English and Dutch settlers, but were hostile to the French, and in the wars of the 18th century were allies of England against the French; their descendants, in reservations in Canada and New York, are a peaceful people, have accepted English religion and culture, and have proved themselves skilful and industrious agriculturists.

IRTISSA, an enormous river of Western Siberia and chief tributary of the Obi; its course from the Altai Mountains runs NW. through the Siberian plains for over 2000 m.; it is navigable almost all the way in summer, and in winter it is a highway for sledge traffic; on its banks stand Semipalatinsk, Omsk, and Tobolsk.

IRVING, EDWARD, a great pulpit orator, born in Annan, Dumfriesshire; bred for the Scottish Church, became in 1819 assistant to Dr Chalmers in Glasgow, and removed in 1822 to the Caledonian Church, London, where he attracted to him preaching the world of fashion as well as intellect in the city, who soon grew tired of him and left him, after which he took to extravagances of thought which did not draw them back, and drew around him instead a set of people more fanatical than himself, and whose influence over him, to which he weakly yielded, infatuated him still more; the result was that he was deposed from the ministry of the Church, and became for a time the centre of an organisation which still exists, in a modified form, and bears his name (1792-1834).

IRVING, SIR HENRY (John Henry Brodribb), born near Glastonbury; was at first a clerk in London, appeared on the Sunderland stage in 1856, spent three years in Edinburgh, and gradually worked his way at Glasgow and Manchester, till he was invited to London ten years afterwards; his performance of Hamlet at the Lyceum in 1874 established his reputation as a tragedian; he remained at the head of his profession, and both in this country and in America secured many triumphs in Macbeth, Shylock, and other Shakespearean characters, and in roles like those of Matthias in "The Bells," Mephistopheles in "Faust," &c.; he contributed to the literature of Acting, and received knighthood in 1895 (1838-1905).

IRVING, WASHINGTON, popular American essayist and historian, born of British parentage in New York, was delicate in early life; his education suffered accordingly, and he travelled in Europe, 1804-1806, visiting Italy, France, and England; returning to New York he was called to the bar, but he devoted himself to a literary career, only interrupted by one period of consular life, and occasional short terms of diplomatic service; his first won fame by his "History of New York," by Diedrich Knickerbocker, 1809, a good-natured satire on the Dutch settlers; the years 1815-1832 he spent in Europe studying and writing; his "Sketch-book," 1819-1820, was very successful, as were "Bracebridge Hall," "Tales of a Traveller," and other volumes which followed it; going to Spain in 1826 he began his researches in Spanish history which resulted in "The Life of Columbus," "The Conquest of Granada," and other works which introduced English readers to the Spain of the 15th and 16th centuries; on his return to America he was treated with great respect by his countrymen; declining the honours they would have given him had he turned aside to politics, he continued to write; among his latest works were "Mahomet and his Successors" and a "Life of Washington"; much courted in society, he was kind and generous in disposition; his writings are marked by humour, observation, and descriptive power; these qualities with an excellent style place him in the foremost rank of American authors, he died, unmarried, at Tarrytown, New York (1783-1866).

IRVINGITES, the name given to the Catholic Apostolic Church as founded by Edward Irving (q.v.), which is repudiated by them, as disclaiming all earthly leadership; their ministry is after the Apostolic order, includes prophets, evangelists, and pastors, and they employ material symbols in their worship besides those of water in baptism and wine in communion, such as incense; the Eucharist they regard as a sacrifice, and they believe in the permanency of the spiritual gifts of the primitive Church.

IRWIN, BARON (3rd Frederick Lindley Wood), British politician. Son of the 2nd Viscount Halifax, he was Minister of Agriculture in the Conservative Government of 1924, and succeeded Lord Reading as Viceroy of India in 1926, in which year he was raised to the peerage (1881-).

ISAAC, a Hebrew patriarch, son of Abraham, born to him when he was old; a mild man with no great force of character, and a contrast to Ishmael, his half-brother; lived to a great age.

ISAAC I., COMNENUS, emperor of the East from 1057 to 1059; raised to the throne by the army; ruled well, but falling ill and fearing he had not long to live, he retired and spent his two remaining years in a monastery; he was a student and annotator of Homer.

ISAAC II., ANGELOS, emperor of the East; a good man, but weak; became emperor in 1185, was deposed by his brother Alexis in 1195; reinstated by the Crusaders in 1203, but overthrown six months later in 1204.

ISAAC OF YORK, the father of Rebecca in "Ivanhoe." ISABELLA, queen of Castile; her marriage with Ferdinand of Aragon led to the union under one sceptre of the crowns of Aragon and Castile, which was followed 10 years after by their united occupancy of the throne of all Spain; she was an able woman, and associated with her husband in every affair of State (1461-1504). See FERNAND V.

ISABELLA II. ex-queen of Spain, daughter of Ferdinand VII.; succeeded him in 1833; was forced to leave the country in 1868; took refuge in France, and in 1870 abdicated in favour of her son (1830-1904).

ISABEY, JEAN BAPTISTE, French portrait-painter, born in Nancy; painted many of the notabilities of France in his day (1767-1865).

ISAÏEUS, an Attic orator, and the teacher of Democritus; wrote 64 orations, of which only 10 are extant, and these not on political issues but forensic, particularly one on the law of inheritance (circ. 420-348 B.C.).

ISAIAH, one of the great Hebrew prophets, the son of one Amos; was a citizen of Jerusalem, evidently of some standing, who flourished between 750 and 700 B.C.; like Amos (q.v.), he foresaw the judgment that was coming on the nation for its unfaithfulness, but felt assured that God would not altogether forsake His people, and that "a remnant," God's elect among them, would be saved—that though theasket would be shattered in pieces, the jewel it contained would be preserved. See HEBREW PROPHECY.

ISAIAH, THE ASCENSION OF, an apocryphal book giving an incoherent account of the martyrdom of Isaiah, and a vision he had under the reign of Hesekiah, apparently the origin of the tradition in Heb. xi. 37, about the prophet having been "sawn asunder."

ISAIAH, THE PROPHECIES OF, consist of two divisions, the first extending from chap. i. to chap. xxxix., and the second from chap. xl. to the end; these two divisions were for long believed to be throughout the work of Isaiah the son of Amos, but modern criticism assigns them in the main to different authors, the one living 150 years after the other; and the reasons for this conclusion are that the author of the latter belonged to a different period of Jewish history from that of the former, is not of the same temper, and has much deeper spiritual insight, while his hopes and expectations are built on a more spiritual view of the method of salvation, the Messiah of the former, for instance, being a conquering king, and that of the latter a suffering Redeemer, who to save the nation has to bear the burden of its sins, and the brunt of them, and so bearing, bear them away.

ISAMBERT, FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ, a noteworthy French lawyer, politician, and historian, born in Annay; began to practise in Paris at the age of twenty-six; becoming known in politics, he gained considerable renown by certain works on French law and by his advocacy of the claims of the liberated slaves in the French West Indies; entering the Chamber of Deputies after the Revolution of July, 1830, he set himself to oppose the Jesuits and to further freedom; "The Religious Conditions of France and Europe" and a "History of Jerusalem" were among his later works; he died at Paris (1792-1867).

ISANDULA, or ISANDLWANA, a hilly place 110 m. N.W. of Durban, where a force of British troops, belonging to Lord Chalmers's column, was encamped on January 22, 1879, and was set upon and almost annihilated by a body of Zulus.

ISAURIA, in ancient times this name was given to the northern slopes of the Taurus in Asia Minor, what is now Karamania; the Isaurians were a wild, savage people; from the 1st to the 4th centuries they were the terror of neighbouring States, and gave Rome herself considerable trouble; but from the 6th century they disappear from history.

ISOCHIA, a beautiful volcanic island 6 m. off the Bay of Naples; its scenery, climate, and mineral springs make it a health resort; it produces excellent fruits and wines; is liable to severe earthquakes; in the last (1883), 4000 persons perished. The chief town bears the same name.

ISCHL, a town in Upper Austria, picturesquely situated on the river Traun, 33 m. S.W. of Salzburg; famous for its saline baths; has salt-works, where 8000 tons of salt are annually manufactured.

ISENGHEIN, the wolf, typifying the feudal baron in the epic tale of Reynard the Fox, as the fox does the Church. See REYNARD.

, a German river, which rises in the Tyrol N. of Innsbruck, passes through Munich, and falls into the Danube after a course of 180 m.

ISÈRE, a river in the S.E. of France, which gives name to a dep., and which, after a course of 180 m., falls into the Rhône near Valence.

ISERLOHN, a town in Prussian Westphalia, 14 m. S.E. of Dortmund; is picturesquely situated, and is engaged in iron-ware manufacture.

ISHMAEL, the son of Abraham; and the handmaid Hagar, cast out of Abraham's household at 15; he became skilful with the bow, and founded a great nation, the Arabs; for the offering of Isaac on Moriah the Arabs substitute the offering of Ishmael on Arafat, near Mecca; Mohammed claimed descent from him; he gives name in modern life to a social outcast driven into antagonism to social arrangements.

ISIDORE, ST., BISHOP OF SEVILLE, born in Carthage, a distinguished man and ecclesiastic, who exercised great influence on Latin Christianity, and on both civil and ecclesiastical matters in Spain, and left a large number of writings of varied interest; he was animated at once by a severe sense of duty and by an admirable Christian spirit (570-638). Festival, April 4.

ISINGLASS, a gelatine substance prepared from the sounds or air-bladders of certain fresh-water fishes, the sturgeon in particular; it is imported from Russia, Brazil, and the Hudson Bay Territory.

ISIS, an Egyptian divinity, the wife and sister of Osiris and mother of Horus, the three together forming a trinity, which is characteristically Egyptian, and such as often repeats itself in Egyptian mythology, typifying the life of the sun, Osiris representing that luminary slain at night and sorrowed over by his sister Isis, reviving in the morning in his son Horus, and wedded anew to his sister Isis as his wife; passing into the mythology of the Greeks, Isis became identified first with Demeter and then with the Moon, while in that of Rome she figures as the Universe-mother.

ISLA, JOSÉ FRANCISCO DE, a Spanish Jesuit, celebrated as a preacher and a humorist and satirist of the stamp of Cervantes; his principal work "Friar Gerund," a satire on the charlatanism and bombast of the popular preaching friars of the day, as Don Quixote was on the false chivalry; the friars he satirised were too strong for him, and he was expelled from Spain, retired to Italy, and died at Bologna in extreme poverty (1703-1781).

ISLAM, or ISLAMISM, the religion of Mohammed (q.v.).

ISLAND OF SAINTS, a name given to Ireland in the Middle Ages.

ISLANDS OF THE BLESSED, fabled islands of the far west of the ocean, where the favoured of the gods after death are conceived to dwell in everlasting blessedness.

ISLAY, a large mountainous island 13 m. W. of Kintyre, Scotland; much of it is cultivated; dairy produce, cattle, and sheep are exported; there are lead, copper, and manganese mines, marble quarries, and salmon fisheries; the distilleries produce 400,000 gallons of whisky annually.

ISLINGTON, a borough of London, 2 m. N. of St. Paul's; includes Holloway, Highbury, Barnsbury, and part of King'sland.

ISMAIL PASHA, khedive of Egypt from 1863, who was obliged by the Powers to abdicate in 1879 (1830-1895).

ISMAILIA, a small town on the Suez Canal; was the headquarters of the work during the construction of the Canal.

ISMAÏLIS, one of the Mohammedan sects which support the claim of the house of Ali, Mohammed's cousin, to supremacy among the faithful; originating about A.D. 770, they rose to importance in the 10th century under Abdallah, a Persian, who introduced Zoroastrian ideas into their creed and prophesied the appearance of a Mahdi or Messiah, who should be greater than the Prophet himself; becoming latterly extremely rationalistic the sect lost its influence in the 13th century, and its representatives in Syria and Persia are now comparatively obscure; in Turkey and Egypt, however, several Mahdis have arisen, of whom the last,

Mohammed Ahmed, b. 1843, gained possession of the Sudan, defeated the Egyptian army in 1883, two years later captured Khartoum, but died at Omdurman shortly afterwards.

ISMENE, the sister of Antigone, who requested, as her accomplice, to be promoted to be sharer in her fate.

ISOBARES, name given to chemical elements having the same atomic mass but different atomic numbers, and consequently, different chemical properties.

ISOBARS, lines drawn on a map through all points where the barometric pressure is the same.

ISOSCELES TRIANGLE, a triangle with two sides equal.

ISOLINIAL, a line drawn on a map through all places where the magnetic dip is the same.

ISOCRATES, an Athenian rhetorician, of a school that was an offshoot of the Sophists (q.v.), and the whole merit of whose oratory depended upon style or literary finish and display; he is said to have starved himself to death after the battle of Cheronea at the age of 98 because he could not brook to outlive the humiliation of Greece by Philip of Macedon and the destruction of its freedom (436-338 B.C.).

ISODORIAN DECRETALS, a body of ecclesiastical decretals imposed upon the Church under the name of Isidore of Seville.

ISOCONAL, a line drawn on a map through all places where the magnetic declination is the same.

ISOLDE (otherwise spelt Isolt, Ysolt, Yseult, and Ysande), the wife of King Mark of Cornwall, who, under the potency of some philter which she had inadvertently taken, conceived an illicit passion for Sir Tristan, her husband's nephew, the story of which is celebrated in mediæval romance.

ISOMERISM, name given by Berzelius in 1831 to the observed phenomenon that two entirely different substances may be composed of the same elements in the same proportion, the difference in properties being due to the arrangement of the atoms in the molecule, e.g. alcohol and dimethyl ether.

ISOMORPHISM, name given to the phenomenon that certain different chemical substances crystallise in the same form.

ISOSTASY, a theory of the continental structure of the earth, originally put forward by Airy, and named by Dutton; it assumes that the continents are composed of lighter material floating on a substratum of heavier material; the theory is confirmed by geological evidence.

ISOTHERMAL EXPANSION, expansion of a gas under conditions which allow of the temperature being unchanged.

ISOTHERMS, lines drawn on a map through all places where the temperature is the same.

ISOTOPES, the name given to elements which are chemically identical and have the same number of outer electrons, but different atomic masses, due to a difference in the structure of the nucleus; the work of F. W. Aston showed that a large number of elements exist in different isotopic forms. See ATOM.

ISOTROPIC SUBSTANCES, those which have the same properties in all directions, particularly with respect to elastic and optical properties; substances which have different properties in different directions (e.g. crystals) are known as anisotropic or anisotropic.

ISPAHAN, the ancient capital of Persia, 226 m. S. of Teheran, on the river Zenderud, which, as its greatest glory, is spanned by a noble bridge of 34 arches; it stands in a fertile plain abounding in groves and orchards, and ruins of its former grandeur, and is a centre of Mohammedan learning; the inhabitants are said to have at one time numbered a million; it produces rich brocades and velvets, firearms, sword-blades, and much ornamental ware; there are many fine buildings, and signs of returning prosperity.

ISRAEL, KINGDOM OF, the name given to the northern kingdom of the 10 tribes of the Israelites which revolted from the kingdom of Judah after the death of Solomon.

ISRAËLS, JOSEF, a Dutch oil and water-colour artist and etcher, born in Groningen; studied in Amsterdam and Paris; devoting himself to genre

ISUMBRAS, ST., a hero of mediæval romance, a proud man subdued by God's justice into penitence and humility.

ITALIAN ARCHITECTURE. The style of architecture called Italian was first developed by Filippo Brunelleschi, and flourished during the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries; it was an adaptation of classical circular-arch form to modern requirements. In Rome it conformed most to ancient types; in Venice it assumed its most graceful form. It was more suitable to domestic than to ecclesiastical work; but the dome is an impressive feature, and St. Peter's at Rome is a noble church.

ITALIC SCHOOL, the name given to the school of Pythagoras (q.v.) who taught philosophy in Italy.

ITALIC VERSION, THE, a version of the Scriptures into Latin on the basis of the Septuagint, executed in N. Italy under episcopal authority from other versions in circulation; being of mixed quality and far from satisfactory, Jerome (q.v.) undertook its revision with a view to a new translation into Latin, known as the Vulgate, direct from the Hebrew and Greek originals.

ITALY, the central one of three peninsulas stretching into the Mediterranean Sea, in the S. of Europe, has the Adriatic and Tyrrhenian Seas respectively on the E. and W., and is separated from France, Switzerland, and Austria in the N. by the various ranges of the Alps. Between the Alps and the Apennines lies the extensive, fertile plain of Lombardy, watered by the river Po, and containing several large lakes, such as Garda, Como, and Maggiore. The Apennines form a very picturesque chain of mountains 5000 ft. high down the centre of the country. The climate varies in different districts, but is mostly warm. Malaria causes many parts in autumn. Agriculture is extensive, but primitive in manner, and the peasantry are very poor. The most important crops are cereals, including rice and maize, grapes, olives, and chestnuts, and in the S. oranges and lemons. Italian wines are of indifferent quality. Coal and iron are scarce; sulphur is produced in large quantities in Sicily. There are large quarries of marble and alabaster. The most important industries are silk, glass, and porcelain. There is an extensive foreign trade, chiefly with France and Great Britain; the exports consist of silk, sulphur, marble, fruit, and wine; the imports of coal, iron, and textile goods. The religion is Roman Catholic; education is now compulsory. The Gothic kingdom of Italy was founded on the ruins of the Roman Empire, A.D. 489. In succession the country was conquered by the forces of the Byzantine Empire, by the Lombards, and by the Franks. From the 11th century onwards its history has been one of constant internal strife and confusion. The presence of the papal power in Rome, the rise of such rich trading republics as the cities of Milan, Florence, Naples, Genoa, and Venice, the pretensions of French kings and German emperors, and factions like those of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, produced endless complications and ruinous wars. In the 16th century the influence of the Austro-Spanish house of Charles V. became dominant; his son, Philip II., was king of Milan and Naples. In more recent times the small states of Italy were continually involved in the wars which devastated Europe, and passed in alliance or in subordination into the hands of Austria, France, and Spain alternately. The 19th century saw the unification of the kingdom. After the abortive movement of Mazzini came Cavour and Garibaldi, who, after severe struggles against the Austrians in the North and the despots of Southern Italy, proclaimed Victor Emmanuel king of Italy in 1861. By various steps the whole of the peninsula, with the islands of Sardinia and Sicily, was brought into the kingdom. The temporal power of the Pope ceased in 1870, though restored in a modified form in 1929. The Government is a constitutional monarchy, though after 1922 chief power was vested in the Fascist under Mussolini (q.v.), who has since ruled autocratically though nominally franchise is exercised by every citizen who can read and write. Conscription is in force for army and navy. These are both strong, the navy being one of the largest in Europe.

ITHACA, one of the Ionian Islands, and one of the smallest, known now under the name Thlaki; it was the home of Ulysses, and his domain as king when he set out for the Trojan War, but he did not see it again till his return after twenty years. Also a town in New York State, U.S., seat of Cornell University (q.v.).

ITHURIEL, an angel whom Milton represents as sent by Gabriel to search for Satan in Paradise, who had found entrance by eluding the vigilance of the guard; he was armed with a spear, the touch of which could unmask any disguise, and by means of which he discovered Satan lurking in the garden in the form of a toad.

ITINERARY, a name given among the Romans to an account or a map of the principal routes through the empire and the stations along them.

ITO, PRINCE HIROBUMI, Japanese statesman; holding advanced views as a result of a study of European conditions, he took an active part in politics and rose to be prime minister of Japan in 1896; under his guidance Japan made considerable strides industrially and took rank as one of the great powers of the world (1841-1909).

ITURBIDE, AUGUSTINE DE, a Mexican general, emancipated Mexico from the yoke of Spain; seized the crown and was proclaimed emperor in 1822, was obliged to abdicate next year and leave the country, but, returning, was immediately arrested and shot (1783-1824).

IVAN (i.e. John), the name of two grand-dukes and four czars of Russia; the two grand-dukes were Ivan I., grand-duke from 1328 to 1340, and Ivan II., his son, grand-duke from 1353 to 1359.

IVAN III., surnamed The Threatening, sought to free Russia from the yoke of the Tartars who had held it tributary for two centuries; gained victories over the Tartars and the Poles, and was the first to receive at Moscow ambassadors from other Powers of Europe; reigned from 1462 to 1505.

IVAN IV., surnamed The Terrible, grandson of the preceding, assumed the sovereignty at 14, had himself crowned in 1546, and took the title of Czar; his first great ambition was to destroy the Tartar power, which he did at Kasan and Astrakhan, receiving homage thereafter from almost all the Tartar chiefs; on the death of his wife in 1563 he lost all self-restraint, and by the ferocity of his wars provoked hostility which the Pope, who had been appealed to, interposed to appease; in a fit of passion he killed his eldest son, whom he loved, remorse for which embittered his last days and hastened his end (1530-1584).

IVANHOE, the hero of Sir Walter Scott's novel of the same, the disinherited son of Cedric of Rotherwood, who falls in love with Rowena, a ward of his father, but by the exhibition of his prowess as a knight is, at the intercession of King Richard, reconciled to his father, with the result that he marries Rowena.

IVANOVA, a Russian town in Vladimir, 210 m. N.E. of Moscow, engaged in the manufacture of cotton, and known as the "Manchester of Russia."

IVES, ST., a town on the Ouse, in Huntingdonshire, 50 m. N. of London, where Oliver Cromwell resided from 1631 to 1635; the chief industries are malting and brewing. Also a fishing town and holiday resort in Cornwall.

IVORY COAST, a territory on the N. of the Gulf of Guinea, belonging partly to Liberia and partly to France and Britain.

IVORY GATE, the gate spoken of in Virgil through which dreams pass that do not turn out true. See HORN GATE.

IVRY, a village in the dep. of Eure, N.E. of Dreux, famous for the victory of Henry of Navarre over the Leagueurs in 1590.

IXION, the king of the Lapithæ (q.v.), who being admitted to heaven attempted to do violence to Hera, and whom Zeus deluded to embrace a phantom image of her instead, whereby he became the father of the Centaurs; Zeus thereafter punished him by fastening his hands and feet to an eternally revolving wheel in hell.

IZALIO, a volcano in the republic of San Salvador, which first announced its existence by a fissure opening in 1793 on the plain that now surrounds it, from which there vomited lava and cinders, accompanied with earthquake.

JABALPUR

JABALPUR, a town, district, and one of the four divisions of the Central Provinces, India; the town is an important commercial and railway centre, situated 228 m. SW. of Allahabad; cotton and carpets are amongst its chief manufactures.

JACK, a familiar form of John, the most widely spread of Christian names, and said to be derived from the French Jacques, or, as others maintain, from Jankin, a distinctive form of Johan or John; Johnkin gives us Jock and Jockey; from its extreme commonness it has acquired that slightly contemptuous significance observable in such compounds as "every man Jack," "Jack-of-all-trades," "Jackanapes"; and the name as applied to the knave in playing-cards, and to the small white ball used as a mark in the game of bowls is an example of its transferred sense.

JACK, RICHARD, British artist. He studied in London and Paris, first exhibited in 1893, became an A.R.A. in 1914, and an R.A. in 1920. Portrait painting has been his forte (1860-).

JACKAROO, the name given in Australia to a greenhorn from England inexperienced in bush life.

JACKDAW OF RHEIMS, one of the Ingoldsby Legends (q.v.).

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSELL, English theologian. Serving under Stopford Brooke and marrying his daughter, he became minister of Unitarian churches in Liverpool and Birmingham, and from 1902 he edited the Hibbert Journal. The following year he became professor of Philosophy at Manchester College, Oxford, and was made its Principal in 1915, a post he held till 1930 (1860-).

(2) A cotton market-town, capital of Madison County, Tennessee, on the South Fork of the Forked Deer River, 107 m. SE. of Cairo, Illinois.

JACKSON, ANDREW, GENERAL, President of the United States, born in Waxhaw, N. Carolina, adopted law as a profession, and in 1789 became public prosecutor at Nashville; took a prominent part in establishing the State of Tennessee, of which he subsequently became a senator and a judge; during the war with Britain (1812-1814) he came to the front and crowned a series of successes by his great victory over Sir E. Pakenham at New Orleans; for a time he was governor of the newly purchased State of Florida, but, resigning, he again entered the U.S. Senate in 1823; five years later he became President, and in 1832 was again elected; his Presidency is associated with the readjustment of the tariff on a purely protective basis, which led to disputes with S. Carolina, the sweeping away of the United States Bank, the wiping out of the national debt in 1835, and the vigorous enforcement of claims against the French for damage done during the Napoleonic wars; his imperious yet honest nature led him to make a more frequent use of the President's veto than any of his predecessors (1787-1845).

JACKSON, FREDERICK GEORGE, Arctic explorer, born in Denstone, Staffs.; led the Hearnsworth-Jackson Polar expedition in 1894-1897 to Franz Josef Land (1860-).

JAHN, FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, a German patriot, born in Pomerania; did much to rouse his country into revolt against the domination of France in 1818; was a teacher of gymnastics and one of the first to inaugurate the principles of physical culture in Germany (1778-1852).

JAHN, JOHANN, a Catholic theologian and Orientalist, born in Moravia; held professorships in Olmütz and Vienna; was distinguished as a Biblical scholar, author of "Biblical Archaeology" in five vols., as well as an introduction to the Old Testament, with grammar, lexicons, &c., in connection with the Biblical languages (1750-1816).

JAHN, OTTO, philologist and archaeologist, born in Kiel; after holding the post of lecturer at Kiel and Greifswald he, in 1847, was appointed to the chair of Archaeology in Leipzig; becoming involved in the political troubles of 1848-1849, he lost his professional position, but subsequently held similar appointments at Bonn and Berlin; his voluminous writings, which cover the field of Greek and Roman art and literature, and include valuable contributions to the history of music, are of first-rate importance (1818-1899).

JAIL FEVER, the popular name of a fever now known to be a severe form of typhus, such as happened in 1879 at the "Black Assize" so called as so many of those in the conduct of it died infected by the prisoners.

JAINAS, sects of Hindus scattered up and down India, allied to the Buddhists, though ecclesiastically in open antagonism to them; they reject the Veda of the Brahmans, and oppose to it another of their own, as also their caste and their sacerdotalism, though they observe the rules of caste among themselves; like the Buddhists, they are divided into an ascetic class and a lay, but monasticism is not developed to the same degree among them.

There are two principal sects, "the white-gowns" and "the air-clad," i.e. naked, though it is only at meals, which they eat in common, that the latter strip naked; they abstain from animal food, drink only filtered water, breathe only through a veil, and go sweeping the ground before them for fear of swallowing or crushing any live thing, even the smallest animalcule. In religion they are atheists, and admit of no Creator or of any perfection of being at the beginning, only at the end.

JALAPA, capital of the Mexican State of Vera Cruz, is prettily situated at the base of the Cordillera, 60 m. NW. of Vera Cruz city; gives its name to jalap, the medicinal plant found in the district.

JALISCO, a maritime state in Mexico facing the Pacific; consists chiefly of elevated plateau; enjoys a fine climate; has long-established mining industries, some agriculture, and a growing trade in cotton and woollen goods, tobacco, &c.; capital, Guadalajara.

JAMAICA ("Land of Springs"), a British crown colony, the largest and most important of the British West India Islands; is one of the Greater Antilles group, and lies some 90 m. S. of the eastern end of Cuba; its greatest length E. and W. 144 m.; is traversed by the Blue Mountains (7400 ft.), whose slopes are clad with luxuriant forests of mahogany, cedar, satin-wood, palm, and other trees; of the numerous rivers, only one, the Black River, is navigable, and that for only flat-bottomed boats and canoes, there are many harbours (Kingston finest), while good roads intersect the island; the climate is oppressively warm and somewhat unhealthy on the coast, but delightful in the interior highlands; for administrative purposes the land area is divided into three counties, Surrey, Middlesex, and Cornwall; the chief trade products are dyewoods, fruit, sugar, rum, coffee, and spices; discovered in 1494 by Columbus, and since 1655 a possession of England.

JAMES, the name of three disciples of Christ; James, the elder son of Zebedee, who by order of the high-priest was put to death by Herod Agrippa; James, the younger son of Alphaeus, and James, the brother of the Lord, destined to death.

JAMES I., king of Scotland from 1424 to 1437, son of Robert III., born in Dunfermline; in 1406, while on a voyage to France, he was captured by the English and detained by Henry IV. for 18 years, during which time, however, he was carefully trained in letters and in all knightly exercises; returning to Scotland in 1424 with his bride, Jane Beaufort, niece of the English king, he took up the reins of government with a firm hand; he avenged himself on the nobles by whose connivance he had been kept so long out of his throne, reduced the turbulent Highlanders to order, and introduced a number of beneficial reforms (e.g. a wider parliamentary franchise, a fixed standard for the coinage, a supreme court of civil jurisdiction, a renovated system of weights and measures), and widened Scotland's commercial relations with the Continent; he was a man of scholarly tastes, a patron of learning, and exhibited no mean poetic gift in his well-known poem, "The King's Quhair"; his vigorous and sometimes harsh and vindictive efforts to lower the powers of the nobility procured him their inveterate hatred, and in 1437 he was murdered in the Dominican monastery at Perth by a band of conspirators (1394-1437).

JAMES II., king of Scotland from 1437 to 1460, son of preceding; during his minority the country was torn by rival factions amongst the nobility, the chief point of contest being the wardship of the young king; an attempt on the part of the conspirators who had murdered James I. to place their leader, the Earl of Athole, on the throne, was frustrated; in 1449 James assumed the duties of his kingship, and in the same year married Mary, the daughter of the Duke of Gueldres; an English war then being waged on the Borders was brought to a close, and the young king entered vigorously upon administrative reforms; in these efforts he was hampered by the opposition of the nobility, and his fiery temper led him to participate in the murder of the chief obstructionist, the Earl of Douglas; protection given to the exiled Douglases by the Yorkists led James to support the claims of Henry VI. in England; he was killed by the bursting of a cannon at the siege of Roxburgh Castle (1430-1460).

JAMES III., king of Scotland from 1460 to 1488, son of James II.; was during his minority under the care of his mother and Bishop Kennedy of St. Andrews, the Earl of Angus being lieutenant-general of the kingdom; but the bishop and the earl died before he was 14, and the nobility fell into faction and disorder again; the first to gain power was Lord Boyd (whose son married the king's sister), but a charge of treason brought about his downfall and exile; the king married Princess Margaret of Denmark in 1469, and gave himself up to a life of quiet ease, surrounded by men of art and culture, while his brothers Albany and Mar, by their military tastes and achievements, won the affections of the nobles; James, becoming jealous, imprisoned them; Albany, who had intrigued with Edward IV., fled to France. Mar died in Craigmillar Castle; while the king and his army were marching to meet expected English action in 1482 the nobles, instigated by Archibald, Bell-the-Cat, seized and hanged the royal favourites at Lauder, and committed the king to Edinburgh Castle; a short reconciliation was effected, but was soon broken, and civil war ensued; the defeat of the royalist forces at Sauchieburn took place in 1488; the king escaped from the field, but was thrown from his horse, and, taking refuge in a house at Beaton's Mill, was there slain (1451-1488).

JAMES IV., king of Scotland from 1488 to 1513, participated in the rebellion which overthrew his father, James III., and succeeded him; but in remorse for his unfilial conduct wore an iron belt all his life; during his youth his supporters carried on the government in their own interests, and despoiled the nobles who had been loyal to the late king; but when he came of age he showed his independence in choosing good advisers, among them Sir Andrew Wood; his reign was marked by resistance to the claims of the Roman pontiff, by the firm and wise administration of law, the fostering of agriculture, of shipbuilding, and other industries; in 1503 James married Margaret, daughter of Henry VII.; after that king's death relations between the two countries became strained; two English men-of-war captured Andrew Barton's privateers; the jewels which the queen inherited from her father were retained by Henry VIII., and James maintained an alliance with Henry's enemy, France; at the solicitation of the French queen, against the advice of his own queen and nobles, he invaded England in 1513, but the invasion ended in disaster at Flodden, where he and the flower of his army perished; he was an able but a headstrong, a pleasure-loving, and an extravagant man (1473-1513).

JAMES V., king of Scotland from 1513 to 1542, son of James IV., was only an infant when he came to the throne; his mother was regent till her marriage with young Angus, when the nobles called James IV.'s cousin, Albany, from France to assume the regency; French and English factions sprang up; Henry VIII. intrigued in the affairs of the country; anarchy and civil war ensued, and Albany retired to France in 1524; in that year the queen-mother, aided by Henry, took the young king from Sir David Lindsay, to whom he had been entrusted, and assumed the government again in his name; the Douglas family usurped his person and the government in 1525; but James asserted himself three years later, and began to reign in person, displaying judgment and resolution, banishing the Douglases, keeping order in the Highlands and on the Borders, establishing the College of Justice, protecting the peasantry from the tyranny of the barons, and fostering trade by a commercial treaty with the Netherlands; he married (1) Princess Magdalene of France in 1537, and (2) Mary of Guise in 1539; Henry, aggrieved by James's failure to meet him in conference on Church matters, and otherwise annoyed, sent 30,000 men into Scotland in 1542; disaffection prevented the Scottish forces from acting energetically, and the rout of Solway Moss took place; the king, vexed and ashamed, sank into a fever and died at Falkland; in this reign the Reformation began to make progress in Scotland, and would have advanced much farther but that James had to support the clergy to play off their power against the nobles (1513-1542).

JAMES I. OF ENGLAND AND VI. OF SCOTLAND, son of Mary, Queen of Scots, and Darnley, born in Edinburgh Castle; was proclaimed king of Scotland when only 13 months old, in 1567; entrusted to the Earl of Mar, and educated by George Buchanan; Mary, Lennox, Mar, and Morton were successively regents, till James assumed the government in 1581, executing Morton and choosing Arran and Lennox for his advisers; plots and counter-plots, the Raid of Ruthven (1582), the siege of Striving by some of the nobles with 10,000 troops, mostly from England, the surrender of the king and the fall of Arran in 1585, the insurrection of the Catholic nobles, 1491-1494, and the Gowrie Conspiracy in 1600, betrayed the restlessness of the kingdom and the weakness of the king; James married Anne of Denmark 1589; on the death of Elizabeth, in 1603, he succeeded to the throne of England as James I.; was at first popular, but soon forfeited all confidence by his favoritism; he governed through creatures like Carr, Earl of Somerset, and the infamous Buckingham, whose indiscretion brought about a war with Spain in 1624; James died immediately afterwards; he has been described by Bully as "the wisest fool in Christendom"; his conduct was certainly much less creditable than his conversation; he held absurdly high views of the royal prerogative, but he sold patents of nobility, and was careless of the misdeeds of his ministers; he did not live to see revolution, but he saw its precursor in the loosening of the bonds of sympathy between sovereign and people (1566-1625).

JAMES II. OF ENGLAND AND VII. OF SCOTLAND, the son of Charles I., reigned in succession to Charles II. from 1685 to 1688; during the Commonwealth he was a soldier in France and Spain; at the Restoration returned to England as Duke of York, and became Lord High Admiral; avowing himself a Catholic in 1671, the Test Act of 1673 enforced his resignation, and thenceforward repeated attempts were made to exclude him from the succession; on becoming king he promised to maintain the Church and to respect the liberties of the people, but his government all the same was arbitrary and tyrannical; he paraded his Catholicism, persecuted the Covenanters, subordinated English interests to French, permitted the "Bloody Assize," suspended the Test Act, violated the rights of the Universities, gave Church offices to Roman Catholics, and by these and many other acts of despotism made his deposition necessary; leading statesmen invited William of Orange to assume the throne, and James fled to France; an invasion of Ireland in 1689 ended in his defeat at Boyne Water; he retired again to France, and lived at St. Germain till his death (1633-1701).

JAMES, EPISTLE OF, a catholic epistle of the New Testament, presumed to have been written by James, the brother of the Lord, addressed to Jewish Christians who, in accepting Christianity, had not renounced Judaism, and the sphere in which it moves is that of Christian morality, agreeably to the standard of ethics given in the Sermon on the Mount. The author looks upon Judaism as the basis of Christianity, and as on the moral side leading up to it, in correspondence with the attention of Christ, that "salvation is of the Jews."

JAMES, GEORGE PAYNE RAINFORD, historical novelist, born in London; wrote as many as a hundred novels, beginning with "Rochester" in 1829, which brought him popularity, profit, and honour; was appointed historiographer-royal to William IV.; was burlesqued by Thackeray (1801-1860).

JAMES, HENRY, an American theological writer, a disciple of Swedenborg, and an exponent of his system (1811-1882).

JAMES, HENRY, American novelist, born in New York; studied law at Harvard, but was eventually drawn into literature, and after a spell of magazine work established his reputation as a novelist in 1875 with "Roderick Hudson"; most of his life was spent in Italy and England, and the writing of fiction was varied with several volumes of criticism, chiefly on French life and literature; his novels are characterized by a charming style, by a delicate, discriminating analysis of rather uneventful lives, and by an almost complete absence of strong dramatic situation (1843-1916).

JAMES, JOHN ANSELL, most influential Congregationalist of his time, born in Dorsetshire; was pastor of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, from 1805 to 1869; won the esteem of all parties; published the "Anxious Inquirer," and many other works (1795-1869).

JAMES, SIR HENRY, military engineer; superintended the geological survey of Ireland, and became in 1854 director-general of the Ordnance Survey (1803-1877).

JANICULUM, one of the hills of Rome, on the right bank of the Tiber.

JANIN, JULES GABRIEL, critic and novelist, born in St. Etienne, France; took to journalism early, and established a reputation by his lively dramatic criticisms in the Journal des Debats; his gift of ready composition betrayed him into a too prolific output of work; he succeeded in 1870 to Sainte-Beuve's chair in the French Academy (1804-1874).

JANIZARIES, a Turkish military force organized in 1330, and more perfectly in 1336; composed originally of Christian youths taken prisoners in war or kidnapped, and trained as Mohammedans; from being at first 10,000, and fostered by the privileges granted them, increased to 300,000 or 400,000 strong, till they became unruly and a danger to the State, when, after various unsuccessful attempts to crush them, they were in 1826 overborne by the Sultan Mahmud II. and dissolved.

JANNÆUS, ALEXANDER, the second of the Asmonean kings of Judea; reigned in the beginning of the century before Christ; insulted the Jews by profaning the rites of their religion, and so roused a hostility which was appeased only by his death, the news of which was received with expressions of triumphant exultation.

JANNES AND JAMBRES, the two Egyptian magicians who thought to outwail Moses in the performance of his miracles, supposed to be referred to in 2 Tim. iii. 8 as "withstanding" him.

JANSEN, CORNELIUS, a Dutch theologian and bishop of Ypres, born in Louvain; studied the works of Augustine, and wrote a book entitled "Augustinus" in exposition of that great Father's doctrine of grace, which was published after his death, and which gave occasion to a great controversy between his followers, in France especially, and the Jesuits (1585-1638).

JANSENISTS, a party in the Roman Catholic Church, supporters of Jansen's views, who, in opposition to the Jesuits, maintained the Augustinian principle of the sovereign and irresistible nature of divine grace. The most celebrated members of the party were the Port-Royalists (q.v.) of France, in particular Arnauld and Pascal, and they were opposed not only by the Jesuits, but by both Louis XIV. and the Pope. Driven from France on the death of Louis, they took refuge in Holland, and thither the Pope Clement XI. followed them, first in 1713, hurling a bull against them, and then in 1719 by excommunicating them and driving them for good from within the pale of the Catholic Church.

JANUARIUS, ST., a Christian who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian, and whose head is preserved in Naples with a phial containing his blood, which, on certain occasions, liquefies when brought into contact with the head. JANUARY, EDICT OF, edict of date January 17, 1562, on which Catherine de Medici granted certain concessions to the Protestants.

JANUS, a very ancient Italian deity who presided over the beginning of the several divisions of time, as well as the beginning of all enterprises, in connection with which he was worshipped; he had two heads, or faces, one of which looked behind into the past and the other before into the future, and this power of penetrating into both it is said Saturn endowed him with as a reward for being received on earth when the latter was driven out of heaven.

JAPAN, an island empire of the N. Pacific, lying along the E. coast of Asia, and separated from Korea and Primorsk by the Sea of Japan, consists of Honshiu, Shikoku, Kyushu, Yezo, and 4000 small islands; though not of volcanic origin, the islands are the most mountainous in the world, have many volcanoes and sulphur springs, and are subject to earthquakes; they are very picturesque, and have peaks from 8000 to 12,000 ft. high; the rivers are too swift for navigation; the coast, not much indented, has yet some good harbours; the valleys are well wooded, but the soil not very fertile; temperature and climate are various; nowhere is the heat intense, but in some parts the winter is very cold; there is much rain, but on the whole it is healthy; the chief industry is agriculture; farming is careful and intelligent; rice, cereals, pulse, tea, cotton, and tobacco are raised, and many fruits; gold, silver, all the useful metals, coal, granite, and some decorative stones are found, but good building-stone is scarce; the manufacture of porcelain, lacquer-work, and silk is extensive, and in some artistic work the Japanese are unrivalled; the chief ports are Yokohama, on the E. of Honshu, which has grown up since 1854, when the country was opened to trade; Iiyogo, on the S. coast of the same island, where are also shipbuilding yards; at Nagasaki and Osaka; the chief exports are tea, silk, and rice; imports cotton, woollen, iron goods, and chemicals; the Japanese, sprung from an ancient union of Tartars with Ainos and with S. Malays, are a kindly, courteous, law-abiding folk, with highly developed artistic tastes; education is compulsory and well provided for; religion is Shintoism and Buddhism, but Christianity is gaining rapid ground; the government is in the hands of the Mikado, who rules now with the aid of ministers and two houses of parliament; education, government, army, and navy—indeed the whole modern civilisation of the country—is on Western lines, though until 1853 foreigners were excluded; a civil war in 1867-1868 effected the change from the old feudalism, and the success of Japan in the war against China in 1894, and against Russia in 1904, proved that the new civilisation was no meagre veneer; the capital is Tokyo.

JEPHTHAH, one of the Judges of Israel, famed for his rash vow in the event of victory to offer in sacrifice the first object that came out of his house on his return, which happened to be his daughter and only child, and whom it would seem he sacrificed after allowing her two months to bewail her fate along with her maidens; it is not stated that her father actually sacrificed her, and it is thought she was only doomed to perpetual virginity.

JEREMIAH, a Hebrew prophet, born in Anathoth, a priestly city 3 m. N. of Jerusalem, where, after his removal thither, he spent as a prophet the greater part of his life, viz., from 629 to 586 B.C.; his prophecy was a lifelong protest against the iniquity and folly of his countrymen, and was conceived in bitter foreboding of the hopeless ruin they were bringing down upon their heads; his faithfulness offended friend and foe alike, and more than one plot was laid against his life, which was one of ever-deepening sadness and one long wail over the ruin of the country he so loved; he lived to see the issue of his prediction in the captivity of the people, though he did not go into captivity with them, the conqueror having allowed him to remain as he wished; he appears to have died in Egypt; he was the author of "Lamentations," and it is thought of sundry of the Psalms. See HEBREW PROPHECY.

JERICHO, an ancient city of Palestine, in the S.W. of a plain of the same name that extends W. of the Jordan and N.W. of the Dead Sea; it was the first city taken by the Israelites when they entered the Holy Land, the walls falling down before them after being compassed for seven days by the priests blowing on rams' horns and followed by the people. In the Great War it was captured by Allenby after severe fighting in 1918.

JEROME, JEROME KLAPKA, dramatist and journalist, author of "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," "Three Men in a Boat," "Diary of a Pilgrimage," &c., as also of plays; editor of the Idler and of a weekly magazine journal, To-Day (1859-1927).

JEROME, ST., a Father of the Church, born in N. Illyria, of rich parents, presumably Christian, although he first became Christian himself of his own election after he was grown up; and from the day of his baptism, "he left," as he says, "not only parents and kindred, but the accustomed luxuries of delicate life"; his fame rests on a translation of the Scriptures into Latin, known as the Vulgate, which he executed at Bethlehem at intervals from A.D. 385 to 404, with the design of showing to the Latin world what was and what was not contained in the original documents for the faith of the Church, and with the result that in the long run the Old and the New Testaments were for the first time presented to and received by the Church as both of equal, or at least common, authority, and as both sections of one book (381-430).

JEROME OF PRAGUE, born in Prague; studied there and at Oxford (where he came under Wycliffe's influence), Paris, Heidelberg, and Cologne; acquired great learning, and displayed great energy and oratorical power; attracted the notice of the kings of Poland and Hungary; joined John Huss in his agitation against the abuses of the Church; became involved in the movement against Huss and, though he recanted, afterwards withdrew his recantation, and was burned at Constance (c. 1385-1416).

JERROLD, DOUGLAS WILLIAM, dramatist and wit, born in London, son of a theatrical manager; began life as a printer; author of "Black-eyed Susan" and other plays; contributed to Punch; "Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures" among other pieces, and edited magazines (1809-1867).

JERSEY, the largest and richest of the Channel Islands, lies 15 m. off the French coast, 100 m. S. of Portland Bill, is oblong in shape, with great bays in the coast, and slopes from the SW. to the SE.; the soil is devoted chiefly to pasture and potato culture; the exports are early potatoes for the London market and the famous Jersey cattle, the purity of whose breed is carefully preserved; the island is self-governing, has a somewhat primitive land tenure, is remarkably free from poverty and crime, and has been under the English crown since 1066, the capital is St. Helier, where there is a college, a public library, a harbour, and a good market.

JERSEY CITY, the most populous city in New Jersey, is separated from New York, of which it is practically a part, only by the Hudson River; has no pretension to beauty, but is a busy railway centre; has very varied manufactures, including sugar, flour, machinery, and chemicals, extensive shipping interests, and great trade in iron, coal, and agricultural produce.

JERUSALEM, the capital of Palestine, holy city of the Jews, belonged originally to the Jebusites, but was captured by David and made his capital; a strong place, built on four hills 2000 ft. above the Mediterranean, enclosed within walls and protected nearly all round by deep valleys and rising grounds beyond; it has been so often besieged, overthrown, and rebuilt that the present city stands on rubbish heaps, the ruins of ancient structures. It was captured by British troops under Allenby in December, 1917.

JERUSALEM, KINGDOM OF, kingdom founded by Godfrey of Bouillon in 1099 and overthrown by Saladin in 1187.

JERUSALEM DELIVERED, an epic poem in 20 cantos by Tasso and published in 1575, the appearance of which constitutes one of the great epochs in the history of literature.

JESSAMY BRIDE, THE, the name given by Oliver Goldsmith to Mary Horneck, with whom he fell in love; it is the title of a novel by F. Frankfort Moore, in which the love story of Goldsmith and Mary is told.

JESSICA, Shylock's daughter, in "The Merchant of Venice."

JESUITS, or SOCIETY OF JESUS, the religious order founded by Ignatius Loyola (q.v.) in 1534, and approved of by bull of Paul III. in 1540, for the conversion of heretics and the propagation of the Roman Catholic faith, and reputed, however self-denying at times, to be unscrupulous in the means its members employed to achieve their ends, which were, broadly speaking, to re-establish over Christendom the tyranny of the Church; they formed communities in the several countries of Europe, but their policy was found dangerous to political liberty as well as religious, and in time they lost considerable ground; there are nevertheless still several communities of them in the south of Europe, and even colleges in England, Ireland, and the United States, as well as missions under them in heathen parts.

JESUS, THE SON OF SIRACH, the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus (q.v.).

JESUS CHRIST (i.e. the anointed Divine Saviour), the Son of God and the hope of Israel, Saviour of mankind, who was born in Bethlehem of the Virgin Mary years before the of the era, and who suffered death on the cross for the salvation of His people in A.D. 33, after a life of sorrow over the sins of the world and an earnest pleading with men to turn from sin unto God as revealed in Himself, in the life He led, the words He spoke, and the death He died, and after leaving behind Him a Spirit which He promised would guide those who believed in Him unto all truth, a Spirit which was and would prove to be the spirit of His manifestation in the flesh from birth onwards to death, and through death to the very grave. See CHRISTIANITY.

JET, a hard, black, bituminous lignite, capable of an excellent polish and easily carved, hence useful for trinkets and ornaments, which have been made of it from very early times; is found in France, Spain, and Saxony, but the best supplies come from Whitby, Yorkshire.

JEU DE PAUME, an oath which the deputies of the Third Estate took on June 13, 1789, not to separate till they had given France a constitution.

JEUNESSE DORÉE (lit. gilded youth), name given to a body of young dandies who, after the fall of Robespierre, strove to bring about a counter-revolution.

JEVONS, WILLIAM STANLEY, logician and political economist, born in Liverpool; in 1866 was professor of Logic of Owens College, Manchester, and 10 years later professor of Political Economy in University College, London; distinguished himself in the departments of both chairs both as a lecturer and a writer; was drowned while bathing at Bexhill (1835-1882).

JEW, THE WANDERING, a Jew bearing the name of Ahazuerus, whom, according to an old legend, Christ condemned to wander over the earth till He should return again to judgment, because He drove Him brutally away as, weary with the cross He carried, He sat down to rest at a stone before his door; in symbolic token it is surmised of the dispersion of the whole Jewish people over the earth as homeless wanderers by way of judgment for their rejection of Christ.

JEWEL, JOHN, early English Protestant divine, born near Iffracombe; educated at Oxford; became Tutor of Corpus Christi; embraced the Reformed faith, and was secretary to Peter Martyr in 1547; he received the living of Bunningwell, Berks, in 1551, but on Mary's accession fled to Strasbourg; Elizabeth made him Bishop of Salisbury in 1559, and three years later he published his "Apology for the English Church," in his defence of which he sought to base the faith of the Church on the direct teaching of Christ apart from that of the Fathers and tradition (1522-1571).

JEW, THE, a people of Semitic origin, descended from Abraham in the line of Jacob. Their history starts with the migration of the family of Jacob to Egypt, where they stayed for 200 years, until oppressed by the Egyptians and led out by Moses, and after by Joshua, into Palestine, about 1200 B.C. Saul became the first king in 1050 B.C., and in 975 B.C. the country was split into Judah and Israel. The latter was conquered by Shalmaneser of Assyria and the people taken into captivity in Media in 720 B.C., and in 588 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem and took the tribes of Judah and Benjamin captive to Babylon. From the time of their captivity in Media the Israelites were lost, and their fate has given rise to speculations (see RETURN OF THE JEWS). After 70 years' captivity in Babylon the tribes of Judah and Benjamin returned to Palestine, where they were in turn subject to Alexander the Great, Egypt, Syria, and Rome, and in 135 A.D. after unsuccessful attempts to regain liberty, the country was laid waste and the inhabitants dispersed through Europe and the East. It was not until after the Great War had placed Palestine in British hands that any attempt was made to repatriate the Jews. The race has been conspicuous for the profession of a religion that has issued from them and affected to the core the rest of the civilised world. Their religion mined by a moral standard; through them more than through any other race has the moral principle, or the law of conscience, been evolved in humanity as the sovereign law of life, and this, at length resolved itself into a faith in one God, the sole ruler in heaven and on earth, the law of whose government is truth and righteousness; but it is to be noted that the Jewish religion never was the religion of the Jewish people, but was from first to last solely the religion of the lawgivers and prophets sent to teach them, to whom they never as a race paid much heed. They were never good for much as a nation, and they are still more powerless for good since it was broken up; there are some 10,000,000 scattered throughout Europe.

JEYPORE, a native state in Rajputana; under British protection since 1818, and was loyal at the Mutiny; the soil is rocky and sandy, but there is much irrigation; copper, iron, and cobalt are found; enamelled gold ware and salt are manufactured; at the capital, Jeypore, the handsomest town in India, there is a State college and a school of art; its business is chiefly banking and exchange.

JEZEBEL, the wicked wife of Ahab, king of Israel, whose fate is recorded in 2 Kings ix. 30-37; gives name to a bold, flaunting woman of loose morals.

JINA (Jñā), the "victorious" one, as contrasted with Buddha, the merely "awakened" one; is in the religion of the Jains (q.v.) a sage who has achieved omniscience, and who came to re-establish the law in its purity where it had become corrupted among men; one of a class, of which it appears there have been 24 in number, who have appeared at intervals after long periods of time, in shapes less imposing or awe-inspiring than at first, and after less and less intervals as time goes on. The Jains claim that Buddha was a disciple of the Jina, their founder, who had finished the faith to which Buddha had only been awakened.

JINGO, a name said to have originated in a popular music-hall refrain, and given to a political party favourable to an aggressive, menacing policy in foreign affairs; first applied in 1877 to that political section in Great Britain which provoked the Turco-Russian war.

JINN, in the Arabian mythology one of a class of genii born of fire, some of them good spirits and some of them evil, with the power of assuming visible forms, hideous or bewitching, corresponding to their character. See GENII.

JOAB, the nephew and a general of David; put to death by order of Solomon 1014 B.C.

JOACHIM, JOSEPH, a distinguished violinist, born near Presburg; famous as a youthful prodigy; was encouraged by Mendelssohn; visited London and frequently played at concerts; became head of the Academy of Music at Berlin in 1869 (1831-1907).

JOACHIM, ST., the husband of St. Anne, and the father of the Virgin Mary.

JOAN, POPE, a woman who, in the guise of a man with male accomplishments, is said for two years, five months and four days to have been Pope of Rome (as John VII.) between Leo IV. and Benedict III. about 853-855, and whose sex was discovered by the premature birth of a child during some public procession. She is said to have been of English parentage, and to have borne the name of Gilberte. The story of her pontificate is found in the "Chronicle" of Marianus Scotus, based on earlier references, but it is of doubtful authenticity and is entirely discredited by Dr. Dollinger.

JOAN OF ARC, ST., or Maid of Orleans, a French heroine, born in Domrémy, of poor parents, but nursed in an atmosphere of religious enthusiasm, and subject, in consequence, to fits of religious ecstasy, in one of which she seemed to hear voices calling to her from heaven to devote herself to the deliverance of France, which was then being laid desolate by an English invasion, occupied at the time in besieging Orleans; inspired with the passion thus awakened she sought access to Charles VII., then Dauphin, and offered to raise the siege referred to, and thereafter conduct him to Rheims to be crowned; whereupon, permission being granted, she marched from Blois at the head of 10,000 men, drove the English soldiers from their entrenchments, sent them scattering to a distance, and thereafter conducted Charles to Rheims to be crowned, standing beside him till the coronation ceremony was ended; with this act she considered her mission finished, but she was tempted afterwards to assist in raising the siege of Compiègne, and on the occasion of a sally was taken prisoner by the Burgundians, handed over to the English, and after an imprisonment of four months tried for sorcery, and condemned to be burned alive; she met her fate in the market-place of Rouen with fortitude. Her sentence was revoked in 1456, and she was canonised in 1920 (1412-1431).

JOANNES, DAMASCENUS, theologian and hymn-writer, born in Damascus; was a zealous defender of image-worship; was said to have had his right hand chopped off by the machinations of his foes, which was afterwards restored to him by the Virgin; d. 754, at the age of 70.

JOB, BOOK OF, in the Old Testament, partly didactic and partly biographic; that is to say, the object of the author is to solve a problem in part speculatively, or in the intelligence, and in part spiritually, or in the life; the speculative solution being, that sufferings are to prove and purify the righteous; and the spiritual consisting in accepting them not as of merely Divine appointment, but manifestations of God Himself, which is accomplished in the experience of Job when he exclaims at last, "Now mine eye seeth Thee." It is idle to ask if the story is a real one, since its interest and value do not depend on its historic, but its universal and eternal truth; nor is the question of the authorship of any more consequence, even if there were any clue to it, which there is not, as the book offers no difficulty to the interpreter which any knowledge of the author would the least contribute to remove. In such a case the challenge of Goethe is apropos, "What have I to do with names when it is a work of the spirit I am considering?" The book of Job was for long believed to be one of the oldest books in the world, and to have had its origin among a patriarchal people, such as the Aramæans, but is now pretty confidently referred to a period between that of David and the return from the captivity, the character of it bespeaking a knowledge and experience peculiarly Jewish.

JOCASTE, the wife of Laius, king of Thebes, and mother of Oedipus; she afterwards married the latter, not knowing that he was her son, and on discovery of the crime put an end to herself, though not till after she had become the mother of Eteocles, Polyneices, Antigone, and Ismené.

JOCELIN DE BRAKELOONDE, an old 12th-century St. Edmundsbury monk, who left behind him a "Chronical" of the Abbey from 1173 to 1202, which, published in 1840 by the Camden Society, gave occasion to the "Past and Present" of Thomas Carlyle; he had been chaplain to the Abbot Samson, the hero of his book, living beside him night and day for the space of six years, and was thus able to make a record of English life and society of his time; d. 1211.

JOCKEY CLUB, the governing body of horse-racing in England, with headquarters at Newmarket, and wide powers.

JODHPUR, largest Rajputana State, under British protection since 1818; is backward in government, education, agriculture, and manufactures; tin, lead, and iron are found; salt is made at Sambhar Lake. The state revolted at the Mutiny. Jodhpur, the capital, is 350 m. S.W. of Delhi, and is connected by rail with Jeypore and Bombay.

JOE MILLER, an English comic actor, whose name provided John Motley with the title for a book of jests (1864-1938).

JOEL, Hebrew prophet, author of a book of the Old Testament that bears his name and that is of uncertain date, but is written on the great broad lines of all Hebrew prophecy, and reads us the same moral lesson, that from the judgments of God there is no outlet for the sinner except in repentance, and that in repentance lies the pledge of deliverance from all evil and of the enjoyment of all good.

JOFFRE, JOSEPH, French general. Joining the army in 1870, he was in charge of a battery during the siege of Paris that year. The outbreak of the Great War found him commander-in-chief of the French army, and he held the position till 1917, co-operating first with French and after 1916 with Haig. In 1917 he resigned his command and was succeeded by Nivelle (1852-).

JOHANNESBURG, the largest town in the Transvaal, 80 m. S. of Pretoria, and 800 m. N.E. of Cape Town; is the centre of Witwatersrand gold-mining fields. Once an ill-equipped town, it made rapid progress last century. Since 1892 railways connect it with Delagoa Bay, Durban, Port Elizabeth, and Cape Town. It possesses many fine buildings, the Town Hall being especially notable. Johannesburg was the seat of the disastrophic among the Uitlanders in 1895, which led to Dr. Jameson's raid.

JOHN, king of England from 1199 to 1216, was the most vicious, short-sighted, tyrannical, and unscrupulous of English monarchs: the son of Henry II., he married Hawisa of Gloucester, and succeeded his brother Richard I., being Richard's nominee, and the tacitly elect of the people; his nephew, Arthur, claimed the French dominions, and was supported by the French king, Philip; in 1200 he divorced Hawisa, and married Isabel of Angoulême, a child-heiress; this provoked the French barons; in the war that ensued Arthur was captured, and subsequently murdered either by John himself or by his orders; Philip invaded Normandy, and with the fall of the Château-Challard in 1204 most of the French possessions were lost to the English crown; then followed John's quarrel with Pope Innocent III. over the election of an archbishop of Canterbury; the Pope consecrated Stephen Langton; John refused to receive him; in 1208 the kingdom was placed under an interdict, and next year the king was excommunicated; John on his side confiscated Church property, exiled the bishops, exacted homage of William of Scotland, and put down risings in Ireland and Wales; but a bull, deposing him and absolving his vassals from allegiance, forced him to submit, and he resigned his crown to the Pope's envoy in 1213; this exaction on Innocent's part initiated the opposition to Rome which culminated in the English Reformation; the rest of the reign was a struggle between the king, relying on his suzerain the Pope, and the people, barons, and clergy, for the first time on one side; war broke out; the king was forced to sign Magna Charta at Runnymede in 1215, but the Pope annulled the Charter, whereupon the barons appealed for help to the Dauphin, and were prosecuting the war when John died at Newark (1166-1216).

JOHN, the name of 23 Popes. J. I., Pope from 523 to 528, was canonised; J. II., Pope from 532 to 535; J. III., Pope from 560 to 578; J. IV., Pope from 640 to 642; J. V., Pope from 686 to 687; J. VI., Pope from 701 to 705; J. VII., Pope from 705 to 707; J. VIII., Pope from 872 to 882; J. IX., Pope from 898 to 900; J. X., Pope from 914 to 928; J. XI., Pope from 931 to 936; J. XII., Pope from 956 to 964—was only 15 when elected, led a licentious life; J. XIII., Pope from 965 to 972; J. XIV., Pope from 984 to 985; J. XV., Pope in 985; J. XVI., Pope from 985 to 996; J. XVII., Pope in 1003; J. XVIII., Pope from 1003 to 1009; J. XIX., Pope from 1024 to 1033; J. XX., anti-Pope from 1043 to 1046; J. XXI., Pope from 1276 to 1277; J. XXII., Pope from 1316 to 1334—a learned man, a steadfast, and a courageous; J. XXIII., Pope in 1410, deposed in 1416—was an able man, but unscrupulous.

JOHN, AUGUSTUS EDWIN, British artist. He studied at the Slade School, started exhibiting with the New English Art Club in 1899, and specialised largely in portraiture. Although unconventional in his art he became an A.R.A. in 1921 (1878-).

JOHN, EPISTLES OF, three Epistles, presumed to have been written by the author of the Gospel, from the correspondence between them both as regards thought and expression; the occasion of writing them was the appearance of Antichrist within the bounds of the Church, in the denial of Christ as God manifest in flesh, and the object of writing them was to emphasise the fact that eternal life had appeared in Him.

JOHN, KNIGHTS OF ST., a religious order of knights, founded in 1048, and institutional properly in 1110, for the defence of pilgrims to Jerusalem; established a church and a cloister there, with a hospital for poor and sick pilgrims, and were hence called the Hospital Brothers of St. John of Jerusalem; the knights consisted of three classes, knights of noble birth to bear arms, priests to conduct worship, and serving brothers to tend the sick; on the fall of Jerusalem they retired to Cyprus, conquered Rhodes, and called themselves Knights of Rhodes; driven thence they settled in Malta and took the name of Knights of Malta, after which the knight-hood had various fortunes. In England the order was revived in 1834 and now devotes itself to ambulance work.

JOHN, PRESTER, a supposed king and priest of a mediæval kingdom, in the interior of Asia; converted to Christianity by the Nestorian missionaries; was defeated and killed in 1302 by Genghis Khan, who had been tributary to him but had revolted; he was distinguished for piety and magnificence.

JOHN, ST., THE APOSTLE, the son of Zebedee and Salome, the sister of the Virgin Mary; originally a fisherman on the Galilee Lake; after being a disciple of John the Baptist became one of the earliest disciples of Christ; much beloved and trusted by his Master; lived after His death for a time in Jerusalem, and then at Ephesus as bishop, where he died at a great age; he lived to see the rise of the Gnostic heresy, against which, as a denial that Christ had come in the flesh, he protested with his last breath as an utter denial of Christ; he is represented in Christian art as either writing his Gospel, or as bearing a chalice out of which a serpent issues, or as in a cauldron of boiling oil.

JOHN, THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO, the fourth Gospel, of which tradition alleges St. John was the author, and which is presumed to have been written by him at Ephesus about A.D. 78; its great design is to bear witness to the Son of God as having come in the flesh, as being not an ideal, therefore, but a real incarnation, and as in the reality of that being the light and life of man; whereas the scene of the other Gospels is chiefly laid in Galilee, that of John's is mostly in Judea, recording, as it does, no fewer than seven visits to the capital, and while it portrays the person of Christ as the light of life, it represents him as again and again misunderstood, even by those well disposed to him, as if the text of his Gospel were "the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not"; the authenticity of this Gospel has been much debated, and its composition has by recent criticism been referred to somewhere between A.D. 160 and 170.

JOHN OF GAUNT, Duke of Lancaster, third son of Edward III.; an ambitious man; vainly seized the crown of Castile; supported the Wycliffites against the clergy; married Blanche of Lancaster, and was made duke by Henry IV.; afterwards married Constance, daughter of Pedro of Castile; was father of Henry IV., king of England (1340-1399).

JOHN O' GROAT'S HOUSE, on the Calthness coast, 1½ m. W. of Duncairn Head, marks the northern limit of the Scottish mainland; the house was said to have been erected eight-sided, with a door at each side and an octagonal table within, to compromise the question of precedence among eight branches of the descendants of a certain Dutchman, John o' Groat.

JOHN OF LEYDEN, originally a tailor; attained great power as an orator; joined the Anabaptists, and in 1534 established at Münster, in Westphalia, a society based on communistic and polygamic principles; but the bishop of Münster interfered, and next year John was put to death with great cruelty (1509-1536).

JOHN OF SALISBURY, bishop of Chartres, born in Salisbury, of Saxon lineage; was a pupil of Abelard; was secretary first to Theobald and then to Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury; was present at the assassination of the latter; afterwards he retired to France and was made bishop; wrote the Lives of St. Thomas and St. Anselm, and other works of importance in connection with the scholasticism of the time (1120-1180).

JOHN THE BAPTIST, the forerunner of Christ, who baptised with water unto, or on the confession of, repentance, in anticipation of, and in preparation for, the appearance in the immediate future of One who would baptize with the Spirit and with fire; his fate at the hands of Herod is well known, and the motive of it.

JOHN II, THE GOOD, king of France from 1350 to 1364, succeeded his father Philip VI.; at the battle of Poitiers he was captured and carried to England; four years later he was allowed to return on leaving his son as hostage; the hostage made his escape; John chivalrously came back to London, and died in captivity (1319-1324).

JOHN'S EVE, ST., a festival celebrated with fires on Midsummer Eve; very universally observed, and with similar rites throughout Europe, in the Middle Ages, the celebration of it being associated with many superstitious practices.

JOHNSON, ANDREW, seventeenth American President, born in Raleigh, N. Carolina; was entirely self-educated, and became a tailor; settling in Tennessee he entered the State legislature in 1839; he sat in Congress from 1843 till 1853; was for four years Governor of Tennessee, and sat in the Senate from 1857 to 1863; though in favour of slavery, he disavowed secession and supported Lincoln, whom he succeeded as President in 1865, and whose policy he continued; but he lost the confidence of Congress, which indeed he treated somewhat cavalierly; his removal of Secretary Stanton led to his impeachment for violation of the Tenure of Office Act; he was tried before the Senate, but acquitted, and completed his term (1868-1875).

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, the great English lexicographer, born in Lichfield, the son of a bookseller, received his early education in his native town and completed it at Pembroke College, Oxford, in 1728; in 1736 he married a widow named Porter, who brought him £800; started a boarding-school, which did not prosper, and at the end of a year he removed to London together with David Garrick, who had been a pupil under him; here he became connected with Cave, a printer, proprietor of the Gentleman's Magazine, with whom he had previously corresponded, and contributed to the pages of the magazine, earning thereby a meagre livelihood, eking out his means by reporting Parliamentary debates in terms which expressed the drift of them, but in his own pompous language; in 1740 he published a poem entitled the "Vanity of Human Wishes," and about the same time commenced his world-famous Dictionary, which was published in 1755; during the progress of the Dictionary Johnson edited the Rambler, writing most of the contents himself, carrying it on for two years; in 1758 he started the Idler; in 1762 the King granted him a pension of £300, and by this he was raised above the straitened circumstances which till then had all along weighed upon him, and was able to live in comparative affluence for the last 22 years of his life; five years after he instituted the Literary Club, which consisted of the most celebrated men of the time, his biographer, Boswell, having by this time been introduced to him, as subsequently the family of Mr. Thrale; in 1770 he began his "Lives of the English Poets," and in 1773 he made a tour in the Highlands with Boswell, of which journey he shortly afterwards published an account; Johnson's writings are not widely read nowadays, but the story of his life as written by Boswell (q.v.) is a veritable human document, and will last as long as men revere those qualities of mind and heart that distinguish the English race, of which he is the typical representative (1709-1784).

JOHNSTON, ALEXANDER KIRK, cartographer, born in Kirkhill, Midlothian; was an engraver by trade, and devoted himself with singular success to the preparation of atlases; the "National Atlas" was published in 1843, and the "Royal Atlas of Geography" (1861) was the finest till then produced; he also executed atlases physical, geological, and astronomical, and constructed the first physical globe; honours were showered upon him by home and foreign geographical societies; he died at Ben Rhydding (1804-1871).

JOHNSTON, SIR HARRY HAMILTON, administrator, explorer, and author; born in London; on scientific expeditions to Congo, Mt. Kilimanjaro, and Lakes

Nyasas and Tanganyika between 1882 and 1889; last-named expedition led to the founding of the British Central Africa Protectorate, of which he was administrator for six years; from 1899 to 1901 he acted as Special Commissioner and Consul-General for the Uganda Protectorate, and it was during this term of office that he discovered the okapi in the Semliki Forest, in 1901; his writings deal with African exploration and development, and with various Empire problems; he has also published some novels (1858-).

JOHNSTON, JAMES FINLAY WHEIR, agricultural chemist, born in Paisley, educated at Glasgow; acquired a fortune by his marriage in 1830, and devoted himself to studying chemistry; after some years in Sweden he was chosen lecturer in Durham University, but he resided in Edinburgh, and wrote his "Catechism of Agricultural Chemistry," since translated into most European languages, and his "Chemistry of Common Life"; he died at Durham (1796-1855).

JOHNSTONE, a Renfrewshire manufacturing town, on the Black Cart, 3½ m. W. of Paisley; has flax, cotton, paper, and iron industries.

JOHORE, a Mohammedan State in the S. of the Malay Peninsula, 15 m. N. of Singapore; half the population are Chinese; exports gambier, pepper, and coffee.

JOINVILLE, JEAN, SIRE DE, French chronicler, seneschal of Champagne, born in Châlons-sur-Marne; author of the "Vie de St. Louis"; followed Louis IX. in the crusade of 1248, but refused to join in that of 1270; he lived through six reigns, and his biography of his sovereign is one of the most remarkable books of the Middle Ages; his "Vie de St. Louis" deals chiefly with the Crusade, and is, says Prof. Saintesbury, "one of the most circumstantial records we have of mediæval life and thought"; it is gossip, and abounds in digressions (1224-1319).

JOKAI, MAURUS, or MORITZ, Hungarian novelist and voluminous author, born in Komorn; published his first novel "Working Day," in 1845; in 1848 took a prominent part in the Hungarian struggle, but afterwards devoted himself to literature, wrote over 300 books, novels, romances, dramas, essays, and poems, and edited several newspapers; his work resuscitated Hungarian literature; was in his old age an able debater in the House of Representatives (1825-1904).

JOLIET, LOUIS, French Canadian explorer, born in Quebec; with Marquette traversed the Wisconsin River to the upper reaches of the Mississippi; made journeys to Hudson Bay and Labrador in the interests of the fur-traders (1646-1700).

JONAH, a Hebrew prophet, who, born in Gathhepher, belonged to the northern kingdom of Israel; he prophesied in the reign of Jeroboam II., his special mission being, at the bidding of the Lord, to preach repentance to the people of Nineveh; his book, which records his mission and the story of it, was written to admonish the Jews that the heathen nations whom they regarded as God's enemies were as much the objects of His mercy as themselves.

JONES, EBENEZER, poet, born in Islington; author of "Studies in Sensation and Event," fraught with genuine poetic feeling; published a pamphlet on "Land Monopoly," in which he advocated the nationalisation of land, apparently as a disciple of Carlyle (1820-1860).

JONES, EDWARD BURNES. See BURNES-JONES.

JONES, ERNEST, Chartist leader and poet, born in Berlin, of English parentage, educated at Göttingen; came to England in 1838, and six years later was called to the bar; in 1845 he threw himself into the Chartist movement, and devoted the rest of his life to the amelioration and elevation of the working-classes, suffering two years' (1848-1850) solitary imprisonment for a speech made at Kensington; he wrote, besides pamphlets and papers in the Chartist cause, several poems; "The Revolt of Hindostan" was written in prison, with his own blood, he said, on the fly-leaves of a prayer-book; he never succeeded in getting into Parliament (1810-1869).

JONES, HENRY ARTHUR, dramatist, born at Grandborough, Bucks; author of "The Silver King,"

"The Middleman," "Judah," "The Dancing Girl," and many other plays (1851-1929).

JONES, INIGO, architect, born in London, son of a cloth-worker; studied in Italy, and returning to England, obtained the patronage of James I., and became chief architect in the country; the Royal Chapel at Whitehall (formerly the banqueting hall) is reckoned his masterpiece; Heriot's Hospital, Edinburgh, is from his design; his style follows Palladio of Venice (1573-1652).

JONES, PAUL, a naval adventurer, whose real name was John Paul, born in Kirkcudbright, Scotland, son of a gardener; took to the sea, engaged in the slave-trade, settled in Virginia, threw in his lot with the colonists and against the mother-country, and offered his services as a sea-captain in the war with a ship of 18 guns; he in 1778 infested the British coast, and made a descent on the shores of his native county; his sympathies were with the French in their struggles for liberty, and he fought in their service as well, capturing two British war-vessels off Flamborough Head; he died in Paris, where he languished in poverty, but the National Assembly granted him a "ceremonial funeral," attended by a deputation; in 1805 his remains were carried over to the United States under escort of a U.S.A. naval squadron (1747-1792).

JONES, SIR WILLIAM, English Orientalist, born in London; passed through Oxford to the English bar in 1774, and was made a Judge in Bengal in 1783; early devoted to Eastern languages and literature, he published numerous translations and other works, concluding with "Sakuntala" and "The Laws of Manu"; he founded the Asiatic Society at Calcutta, where he died (1746-1794).

JONGLEURS, were medieval minstrels of Provence and Northern France, who sang and often composed songs and tales, but whose jesting and buffoonery distinguished them from the knightly troubadours and trouvères.

JONSON, BEN, dramatist, born in Westminster, posthumous son of a clergyman of Scottish descent; was in his youth first a bricklayer, afterwards a soldier in the Netherlands, whence he returned about 1592; married a shrew, and became connected with the stage; he was one of the most learned men of his age, and for forty years the foremost, except Shakespeare, in the dramatic and literary world; killing his challenger in a duel nearly cost him his life in 1598; he was branded on the left thumb, imprisoned, and his goods confiscated; in prison he turned Catholic, but twelve years later reverted to Protestantism; the opening of the century brought an unpleasant difference with Dekker and Marston, and saw the famous Mermaid Club at its zenith; for nine years after Shakespeare's death he produced no dramas; in 1619 he received a degree, M.A., from Oxford, the laureatehip, and a small pension from the King; now a widower, he founded with Herrick, Suckling, Carew, and others the Apollo Club at the Devil Tavern; in the new reign he turned again to dramatic work with sadly diminished power; he died in poverty, but was buried in Westminster Abbey, his tombstone bearing the words "O rare Ben Jonson"; he wrote at least sixteen plays, among them "Every Man in his Humour" (1598), in which Shakespeare acted, "The Poetaster" (1601), which vexed Dekker, the tragedy of "Sejanus" (1603), "The Silent Woman" (1609), a farcical comedy, Dryden's favourite play, and his most elaborate and masterly work, "The Alchemist" (1610); he wrote also thirty-five masques of singular richness and grace, in the production of which Inigo Jones provided the mechanism; but his best work was his lyrics, first of which stands "Drink to me only with thine eyes," a song of exquisite delicacy and beauty (1573-1637).

JOPPA. See JAFFA.

JORDAENS, JAKOB, a Dutch painter and engraver, born in Antwerp; was a friend of Rubens, and ranks next him among the Flemings (1593-1678).

JÖTUNHEIM, the abode of the Jötuns in the Norse mythology, as Asenheim is that of the Norse deities.

JÖTUNS, a race of giants in the Norse mythology, "huge, shaggy beings of a demonic character, representing the dark hostile Powers of Nature, such as Frost, Fire, Sea-tempest, who dwell in Jötunheim, a distant, dark chaotic land . . . in perpetual internecine feud with the gods, or friendly powers, such as Summer-heat and the Sun, and who dwell far apart."

JOUBERT, BARTHELEMI, French general; distinguished himself in the Rhine and Italian campaigns, and fell mortally wounded at the battle of Novi; one of the most promising generals France ever had (1769-1799).

JOUBERT, JOSEPH, author of "Pensées," born in Montliac, Périgord; educated in Toulouse, succeeded to a small competency, came to Paris, got access to the best literary circles, and was the most brilliant figure in the salon of Madame de Beaumont; his works were exclusively penées and maxims, and bear at once on ethics, politics, theology, and literature (1754-1824).

JOUFFROY D'ABBANS, CLAUDE, MARQUIS DE, is claimed by the French as the first inventor of the steamboat; he made a paddle-steamer ply on the Rhône in 1783, but misfortunes due to the Revolution hindered his progress, till he was forestalled by Fulton on the Seine in 1803 (1751-1832).

JOUGE, an iron collar hung by a chain in some public place, was fastened round a culprit's neck, who was thus exposed in a sort of pillory; in use in Scotland from the 16th to the 18th centuries.

JOULE, a unit of work and energy equal to 10 million ergs; it is equivalent to the energy supplied in one second by an electrical circuit of one watt.

JOULE, JAMES PRESCOTT, a celebrated physicist, born in Salford; was a pupil of Dalton, and devoted his time to physical and chemical research; made discoveries in connection with the production of heat by voltaic electricity, demonstrated the equivalence of heat and energy, and established on experimental grounds the doctrine of the conservation of energy (1818-1889).

JOURDAN, JEAN BAPTISTE, COMTE, marshal of France, born in Limoges, named for the Republic the victory of Fleurus in 1794, but was in 1795 defeated at Hohenlinden, and subsequently by the Archduke Charles of Austria; served under Napoleon, and became governor of the Hôtel des Invalides under Louis Philippe (1762-1833).

JOWETT, BENJAMIN, Master of Balliol College, Oxford, born in Cumberland; was a fellow and tutor of his college till his election to the mastership in 1870; his name will always be associated with Balliol College, where his influence was felt, and made the deepest impression; he wrote an article "On the Interpretation of Scripture" in the "Essays and Reviews," and a commentary on certain epistles of St. Paul, but he achieved his greatest literary successes by his translations of Plato's "Dialogues," the "History" of Thucydides, and the "Politics" of Aristotle (1817-1893).

JOWETT, REV. JOHN HENRY, English nonconformist divine. He first attracted attention as minister of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, where he succeeded Dr. Dale in 1895. In 1911 he went to the New York Presbyterian Church, and in 1917 returned to England to take charge of Westminster Chapel (1864-1923).

JOYNSON-HICKS, SIR WILLIAM. See BRENTFORD.

JUAN, DON, a poem by Byron, a work which, as Stopford Brooke remarks, "was written in bold revolt against all the conventionality of social morality, religion, and politics, and in which—escaped from his morbid self, he ran into the opposite extreme—he claimed for himself and others absolute freedom of individual act and thought in opposition to the force of society which tends to make all men after one pattern."

JUAN FERNANDEZ, a mountainous island 3000 ft. high, off the Chilean coast, 420 m. W. of Valparaiso; was the lonely residence of Alexander Selkirk (1704-1709) (q.v.); was used as a penal settlement from 1819 to 1835, and is inhabited by a few seal and sea-lion hunters.

JUAREZ, BENITO, president of Mexico, born in Oaxaca, of Indian extraction; was elected to the Presidency twice over, in 1861 and 1867 (1806-1872).

JUBILEE, YEAR OF, a year during which, among the Hebrews, it was required that all land which had passed out of the original owner's hands during the 50 years preceding should be restored, all who during that time had been forced to sell their liberty should be released, and all debts contracted in that period should be remitted, a requirement, however, which does not appear to have been very rigorously or regularly observed.

JUDEA, a southern district of Palestine extending in one direction between Samaria and the desert of Arabia, and in the other between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea.

JUDAH, KINGDOM OF, the kingdom in the S. of Palestine of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin that remained true to the house of David after the revolt of the other ten under Jeroboam, who formed what was called the kingdom of Israel, larger, but weaker than the other.

JUDAIZERS, a party, called also EBIONITES, in the primitive Church who sought to overlay the simple ordinances of Christianity with Judaic observances and rites, "a yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear."

JUDAS, surnamed ISCARIOT, one of the twelve Apostles of Christ, who from some infatuation that unaccountably possessed him, and to his everlasting infamy, betrayed his Master to his enemies for 30 pieces of silver, was designated by Christ as the Son of Perdition.

JUDAS MACCABEUS, a son of Mattathias (q.v.), who succeeded his father in the leadership of the Jews against the Syrians in the war of the Maccabees, and who gave name to the movement, a man of chivalric temper, great energy, firm determination, dauntless courage, and powerful physique; who, with the elect of his countrymen of kindred spirit encountered and overthrew the Syrians in successive engagements, till before a great muster of the foe his little army was overwhelmed and himself slain in 160 B.C. See MACCABEES.

JUDE, EPISTLE OF, an epistle in the New Testament, of which Judas, the brother of James, was the author; written to some unknown community in the primitive Church, in which a spirit of antinomian liberalism had arisen, and the members of which are denounced as denying the sovereign authority of the Church's Head by the practical disobedience and scorn of the laws of His kingdom. For the drift and modern uses of this epistle see Ruskin's "Fors Clavigera," chaps. lxvi. and lxvii., where it is shown that the enemies of the faith in Jude's day are its real enemies in ours.

JUDGES, BOOK OF, a book of the Old Testament; gives an account of a series of deliverances achieved on behalf of Israel by ministers of God of the nation so called, when, after their occupation of the land, now this tribe and now that was threatened with extinction by the Canaanites; these deliverers bore the character of heroes rather than judges, but they were rather tribal heroes than national, there being as yet no king in Israel to unite them into one; of these the names of twelve are given, of which only six attained special distinction, and their rule covered a period of 300 years, which extended between the death of Joshua and the birth of Samuel; the story throughout is one: apostasy and consequent judgment, but the return of the Divine favour on repentance ensured.

JUDGMENT, PRIVATE, assumption of judgment by individual reason on matters which are not amenable to a lower tribunal than the universal reason of the race.

JUDITH, a wealthy, beautiful, and pious Jewish widow who, as recorded in one of the books of the Apocrypha called after her, entered, with only a single maid as attendant, the camp of the Assyrian army under Holofernes, that lay investing Bethulia, her native place; won the confidence of the chief, persuaded him to drink while alone with him in his tent till he was brutally intoxicated, cut off his head, and, making good her escape, suspended it from the walls of the place, with the issue of the utter rout of his army by a sally of the townsfolk.

JUDSON, ADONIRAM, Burmese missionary and scholar, born in Malden, Mass.; sailed for Burma 1812, and for 40 years laboured devotedly, translating the Bible into Burmese, and compiling a Burmese-English dictionary; he died at sea on his way home (1788-1850).

JUGGERNAUT, or PURI, a town on the S. coast of Orissa, in Bengal; one of the holy places of India, with a temple dedicated to Vishnu, and containing an idol of him called Jagannātha (for the Lord of the World), which, in festival times, attracts thousands of pilgrims to worship at its shrine, on one of which occasions the idol is dragged forth in a ponderous car by the pilgrims and back again, under the wheels of which, till prohibited, multitudes would throw themselves to be crushed to death in the hope of thereby attaining a state of eternal beatitude.

JUGO-SLAVIA, or the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, an area of 250,000 sq. m. consisting of the old kingdoms of Serbia and Montenegro, and of Croatia and Slavonia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, and parts of Banat, Carulia, and Styria. The independence of the new state was declared in December, 1918, and was recognised by the Treaty of Versailles. Belgrade is the capital, and other important towns are Zagreb and Sarajevo. With the Danube as the main waterway and a lengthy coastline on the Adriatic trade flourishes, maize, wheat, poultry produce, and timber being largely exported. Three-quarters of the inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

LAKE DISTRICT, a district in Cumberland and Westmorland, 20 m. long by 25 m. broad, abounding in lakes, including Windermere, Rydal Water, Conistone Water, and Ullswater; is environed with scenery of rare beauty, and much frequented by tourists.

LAKE DWELLINGS, primitive settlements, the remains of which have been found in many parts of Europe, but chiefly in Switzerland, the N. of Italy, and in Scotland and Ireland. They were constructed in various ways. In the Swiss lakes piles, consisting of unbarked tree trunks, were driven in a short distance from the shore, and strengthened more or less by cross beams; extensive platforms laid on these held small villages of rectangular wooden huts, thatched with straw and reeds. These were sometimes approachable only in canoes, more often connected with the shore by a narrow bridge, in which case cattle were kept in sheds on the platforms. In Scotland and Ireland the erection was rather an artificial island laid down in 10 or 12 ft. of water with brushwood, logs, and stones, much smaller in size, and holding but one hut. The Swiss dwellings, the chief of which are at Meilen, on Lake Zurich, date from very early times, some say 2000 years before Christ, and contain remains of the Stone, Bronze, and Iron Ages, weapons, instruments, pottery, linen cloth, and the like. The relic of latest date is a Roman coin of A.D. 54. The British remains are much more recent, belonging entirely to the Iron period and to historic times. The object sought in these structures is somewhat obscure—most probably it was the security their insular nature afforded.

LAKE POETS, a school of English poets, the chief representatives of which were Wordsworth, Southey, and Coleridge, who adorned the beginning of the 19th century, and were so designated by the Edinburgh Review because their favourite haunt was the Lake District (q.v.) in the N. of England, and the characteristic of whose poetry may be summed up as a feeling of and a sympathy with the pure spirit of nature.

LAOCOON, a priest of Apollo, in Troy, who having offended the god by, for one thing, advising the Trojans not to admit the wooden horse of the Greeks within the walls, was, with his two sons, while engaged in sacrificing to Poseidon, strangled to death in the coils of two enormous serpents sent to kill him, a subject which is the theme of one of the grandest relics of ancient sculpture now in existence, and preserved in the Vatican.

LAODAMIA, a Grecian lady, who accompanied her husband to the Trojan War, and who, on his death on the field, begged the gods to restore him to her for three hours, a prayer which was granted, but with the result that at the end of the time she died with him and accompanied him on his return to Hades.

LAODICEA. Eight ancient cities bore this name: the chief, situated on the Lycus, in Phrygia, lay on the way between Ionia and the Euphrates; was a city of great commerce and wealth, the seat of schools of art, science, medicine, and philosophy, and of an early Christian bishopric; though the Church was stigmatised in the Revelation, two councils assembled here in A.D. 363 and 478, the former of which influenced the determination of the canon of both Testaments; the city, destroyed by the Mohammedan invasions, is now in ruins.

LAOMEDON, the founder of Troy, who persuaded Apollo and Neptune to assist him in building the walls, but refused the recompense when the work was finished, in consequence of which the latter sent a monster to ravage the country, which could be propitiated only by the annual sacrifice to it of a young maid, till one year the lot fell on Hermione, the king's daughter, when Hercules, persuaded by the king, slew the monster and delivered the maiden.

LAOTZE, (i.e. the old Philosopher), a Chinese sage, born in the province of Ho-nan about 555 B.C., a contemporary of Confucius, who wrote the celebrated "Tao-te-King," canon, that is, of the Tao, or divine reason, and of virtue, one—and deservedly so on account of its high ethics—of the sacred books of China; he was the founder of Taoism, one of the three principal religions of China, Confucianism and Buddhism being the other two, although his followers, the Tao-ssu, as they are called, are now degenerated into a set of jugglers.

LA PÉROUSE, JEAN FRANÇOIS, COMTE DE, a celebrated French navigator, born near Albi, in Languedoc; after distinguished services in the navy he was in 1782 sent with two frigates on a voyage of discovery by Louis XVI.; he explored the coasts of California and Macao and touched upon some Chinese and other eastern ports, after which he proceeded to Australia, only to find an English settlement already established at Botany Bay; the fate of his expedition remained a mystery until 1827, when some relics of it were discovered in a Pacific island (1741-1788).

LAPTHYM, a race inhabiting the mountains of Thessaly; subject to Perithous, who, on the occasion of his marriage with Hippodamia, invited his kinsfolk the Centaurs to the feast, but these, under intoxication from the wine, attempting to carry off the bride and other women, were set on by the Lapthym and, after a bloody struggle, overpowered.

LAPLACE, PIERRE SIMON, MARQUIS DE, a celebrated French mathematician, born in Beaumont-en-Auge, Normandy; the son of a farmer; after teaching in his native place went to Paris (1767), where he became professor in the Royal Military School; becoming a member of the Académie des Sciences in 1785, he attained a position among mathematicians and astronomers almost equal to Newton's; his "Three Laws" demonstrated the stability of the solar system; he published many treatises on lunar and planetary problems, electricity, magnetism and a Nebular hypothesis; his "Mécanique Céleste" is unrivalled in that class of work; surviving the Revolution, he became implicated in politics without success or credit; he received his marquisate from Louis XVIII. in 1817, when he became President of the French Academy; "Laplace (q.v.) has proved that on Newton's theory of gravitation the planetary system would endure for ever; Laplace, still more cunningly, even guessed that it could not have been made on any other scheme" (1748-1827).

LAPLAND, a stretch of country in the N. of Europe, between the Atlantic and the White Sea; is divided between Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Russia. Its climate is very severe; mountainous in the W., it becomes more level in the E., where are many marshes, lakes, and rivers; the summer is never dark, and there are six to eight weeks of winter never light. The Lapps are closely allied to the Finns, small of stature, thick lipped, and with small piercing eyes; proverbially uncleanly, not very intelligent; are good-natured, but untruthful and parsimonious; nominally Christian, but very superstitious; they are kindly treated by both Norway and Sweden. The mountain Lapps are nomads, whose wealth consists of herds of reindeer which supply nearly all their wants. The sea Lapps live by fishing. The forest and river Lapps, originally nomads, have adopted a settled life, domesticated their reindeer, and taken to hunting and fishing.

LA PLATA, a city, founded in 1884 as capital of the prov. of Buenos Ayres, 30 m. SE. of Buenos Ayres city; rapidly built, it has continued to grow, and has now some handsome buildings, a college, and cotton and woollen manufactures; a canal connects it with the La Plata River.

LONDON, on the Thames, 50 m. from the sea, the capital of the British Empire, is the most populous and the wealthiest city in the world. An important place in Roman times, it was the cap. of the East Saxons, and has been the metropolis of England since the Norman Conquest; it possesses, therefore, innumerable historic buildings and associations. Often devastated by plague and fire, its progress has never been stayed; its population more than quadrupled itself last century. The City of London proper occupies one square mile in the centre, is wholly a commercial part, and is governed by an annually elected Lord Mayor and aldermen; is the seat of a bishopric, with St. Paul's for cathedral. The cities of London and Westminster, with twenty-five boroughs under local officers, constitute the metropolis, and since 1888 the county of London, and send 62 members to Parliament. Streets in the older parts are narrow, but newer districts are well built; the level ground and density of building detracts from the effect of innumerable magnificent edifices. Buckingham, Kensington, and St. James's are royal Palaces; the Houses of Parliament is the ... Gothic building in the world; St. Paul's, built by Sir Christopher Wren, contains the remains of Nelson and Wellington, Reynolds, Turner, and Wren himself. Westminster, consecrated 1269, is the burial-place of England's greatest poets and statesmen, and of many kings; the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand were opened in 1882. London has a University, 700 colleges and endowed schools, among which Westminster, St. Paul's, and Dulwich are famous; many medical hospitals, and schools and charitable institutions of all kinds. It is the centre of the English literary and artistic world, and of scientific interest and research; here are the largest publishing houses, the chief libraries and art-galleries, and museums; the British Museum and Library, the National Gallery, &c., and magnificent botanical and zoological gardens. London is also a grand emporium of commerce, and the banking centre of the world. It has nine principal docks; its shipping trade is unrivalled; it pays more than half the custom duties of the kingdom, and handles more than a quarter of the total exports; its warehouse trade is second only to that of Manchester; it manufactures everything, chiefly watches, jewellery, leather goods, cycles, pianos, and glass. The control of traffic, the lighting, and water-supply of so large a city are causing yearly more serious problems.

LONDON, a town of Middlesex county, Ontario, near the S. end of the peninsula, in the middle of a fertile district, and a rising place.

LONDON BRIDGE, a bridge crossing the Thames from the City to Southwark. The first, a wooden one, was erected in 1200; the present stone bridge was opened in 1831 and was widened in 1903.

L'ORIENT, a seaport in Morbihan; contains the principal shipbuilding yard in France; was founded by the French East India Company in 1664 in connection with their trade in the East.

LORNE, MARQUIS OF, eldest son of the 8th Duke of Argyll; entered Parliament in 1868; married Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, in 1871; became Governor-General of Canada in 1878, member of Parliament for South Manchester in 1895, Governor of Windsor Castle. Afterwards 9th Duke of Argyll (1845-1914).

LORRANE, a district in France, between Metz and the Vosges; belonged originally to Germany, became French in 1766, was restored to Germany in 1871, and to France in 1919.

LORRANE, CLAUDE. See CLAUDE OF LORRAINE.
LOS ANGELES, a city in South California, 345 m. E.E. of San Francisco, and founded in 1781; is the centre of the American film industry, a great orange-growing district, and a health resort.

LOST TRIBES, the ten tribes of the race of Israel whom the Assyrians carried off into captivity (see 2 Kings xvii. 6), and of whom all trace has been lost, and only in recent years guessed at, some maintaining that the British race, or Anglo-Celtic peoples, are descended from them.

LOTHAIRE, the name of two emperors of the Holy Roman Empire: L. I. (795-855); L. II. (1075-1137).

LOTHARIO, a young nobleman, a character in Rowe's play "The Fair Penitent" (1703); a synonym for a libertine.

LOTHIANS, THE, a Scottish district which embraces the counties of Haddington, Edinburgh, and Linlithgow.

LOTI, PIERRE, pen-name of Louis Marie Julien Viaud, French novelist. He went to sea at 14, and the sea and the East were the main theme of his novels, of which the best-known is "Madame Chrysanthème" (1850-1923).

LOTUS EATERS, or LOTOFAGI, an ancient people inhabiting a district of Cyrenaica, on the N.E. coast of Africa, who lived on the fruit of the lotus-tree, from which they made wine. Ulysses and his companions in their wanderings landed on their shores, but the soothing influence of the lotus fruit so overpowered them with languor that they felt no inclination to leave, or any more a desire to pursue the journey homewards. See Tennyson's poem "The Lotus-eaters."

LOTZE, RUDOLF HERMANN, German philosopher, born in Bautzen, in Saxony; professor successively at Göttingen and Berlin; believed in metaphysics as well as physics, and was versed in both; "Microcosmus" is his principal work, published in 1864; he founded the system of "teleological idealism," based on ethical considerations; he repudiated agnosticism, and had as little patience with a mere mechanical view of the universe as Carlyle (1817-1881).

LOUDON, JOHN CLAUDIUS, botanist and horticulturist, born in Cambuslang, Lanarkshire; wrote largely on plants and their cultivation, and an "Arboretum" on trees and shrubs (1783-1843).

LOUIS I., LE DEBONNAIRE (i.e. the Gentle), was king of France from 814 to 840 in succession to his father Charlemagne, but was too meek and lowly to rule, and sifter for a monk than a king; suffered himself to be taken advantage of by his nobles and the clergy; was dethroned by his sons, and compelled to retire into a cloister, from which he was twice over brought forth to stay the ravages of their enemies; he divided his kingdom among them during his lifetime, and bequeathed it to them to guard over it when he was gone, to its dismemberment (778-840).

LOUIS VI., LE GROS (i.e. the Fat), was son of Philip I.; was associated in the royal power with his father from 1098 to 1108, and sole king from 1108 till 1137; in his struggle against the great vassals he, by the help of the clergy and the bourgeois, centralised the government in the crown; had trouble with Henry I. of England as Lord Superior of Normandy, and was defeated by him in battle in 1119; under his reign the bourgeois achieved their independence, and though he did nothing to initiate the movement he knew how to profit from the achievement in the interest of the monarchy (1078-1137).

LOUIS VII., THE YOUNG, son of the preceding, married Eleanor of Aquitaine; took part in the second crusade; on his return divorced his queen for her profligacy in his absence, who married Henry II. of England, and brought with her as dowry to Henry the richest provinces of France, which gave rise to the Hundred Years' War (1120-1180).

LOUIS VIII., THE LION, son of Philip Augustus; offered by the barons of England the crown of England, he was crowned at London in 1216, but defeated at Lincoln next year, he was obliged to recross the Channel; became king of France in 1223; he took several towns from the English, and conducted a crusade against the Albigenses (1187-1226).

LOUIS IX., SAINT LOUIS, son of the preceding; was a minor at the death of his father, and the country was governed by his mother, Blanche of Castile, with a strong hand; on attaining his majority he found himself engaged with the English under Henry, who had been called on to assist certain of the great barons in revolt, but in 1242 he defeated them in three engagements; under a vow he made during a dangerous illness he became a crusader, and in 1249 landed in Egypt with 40,000 men, but in an engagement was taken prisoner by the Saracens; released in 1250 on payment of a large ransom, though he did not return home for two years after, till bearing of the death of his mother, who had been regent during his absence; on his return he applied himself to the affairs of his kingdom and the establishment of the royal power, but undertaking a second crusade in 1270, he got as far as Tunis, where a plague broke out in the camp, and he became one of the victims; he was an eminently good and pious man, and was canonised by Boniface VIII. in 1297 (1215-1270).

LOUIS XI., son of Charles VII., born in Bourges, of a cruel and treacherous nature, took part in two insurrections against his father, by whom he had been pardoned after the first and from whom, after the second, he had to flee for refuge to Burgundy, where he remained till his father's death in 1461; he signalled the commencement of his reign by severe measures against the great vassals, which provoked a revolt, headed by the Dukes of Burgundy and Bretagne, which he succeeded in subduing more by his crafty policy than force of arms; involved afterwards in a war with Charles the Bold of Burgundy, and soliciting an interview, he was discovered by Charles to have been sowing treason among his subjects, was taken prisoner, and only released on a solemn protestation of innocence; notwithstanding the sinister and often cruel character of his policy, he did much to develop the resources of the country and advance the cause of good government by the patronage of learning; the crimes he had committed weighed heavily on his mind towards the end of his days, and he died in great fear of death and the judgment (1423-1483).

LOUIS XIII., the son of Henry IV.; being only nine years old at the death of his father, the government was conducted by Marie de' Medici, his mother, and at his accession the country was a prey to civil dissensions, which increased on the young king's marriage with a Spanish princess; the Huguenots rose in arms, but peace was concluded in 1623; it was now that Richelieu came to the front to assume the reins with his threefold policy of taming the nobles, checkmating the Huguenots, and humbling the house of Austria; Rochelle, the headquarters of the Huguenots, revolted, the English assisting them, but by the strategy adopted the city was taken and the English driven to sea; henceforth the king was a nonentity and the cardinal was supreme; the latter died in 1642 and the king the year after, leaving two sons, Louis, who succeeded him, and Philip, Duke of Orleans and the first of his line (1601-1643).

LOUIS XIV., the "Grand Monarque," son of the preceding; when he succeeded to the throne of France the government was in the hands of his mother, Anne of Austria, and Cardinal Mazarin, her minister; under the regency the glory of France was maintained in the field, but her internal peace was disturbed by the insubordination of the parlement and the troubles of the Fronde; by a compact on the part of Mazarin with Spain before he died Louis was married to the Infanta Maria Theresa in 1659, and in 1660 he announced his intention to rule the kingdom alone, which he did for 54 years with a decision and energy no one gave him credit for, in fulfilment of his famous protestation L'état, c'est moi, choosing Colbert to control finance, Louvois to reorganise the army, and Vauban to fortify the frontier towns; he sought to be as absolute in his foreign relations as in his internal administration, and hence the long succession of wars, which, while they brought glory to France, ended in exhausting her; at home he suffered no one in religious matters to think otherwise than himself: he revoked the Edict of Nantes, sanctioned the dragonnades in the Cévennes, and to extirpate heresy encouraged every form of cruelty; yet when we look at the men who adorned it, the reign of Louis XIV. was one of the most illustrious in letters and the arts in the history of France: Corneille, Racine, and Molière eminent in the drama, La Fontaine and Boileau in poetry, Bossuet in oratory, Bruyère and Rochefoucauld in morals, Pascal in philosophy, Saint-Simon and Retz in history, and Fomsein, Lorraine, Lebrun, Perault, &c. in art (1638-1715).

LOUIS XV. Bien-aimé (i.e. Well-Beloved), great-grandson of the preceding, and only five at his death, the country during his minority being under the regency of Philip, Duke of Orleans; the regency was rendered disastrous by the failure of the Mississippi Scheme of Law (q.v.) and a war with Spain, caused by the rejection of a Spanish princess for Louis, and by his marriage to Maria Leszcynski, the daughter of Stanislas of Poland; Louis was crowned king in 1722 and declared of age the following year; in 1728 Cardinal Fleury, who had been his tutor, became his minister, and under him occurred the war of the succession to Poland, concluded by the treaty of Vienna, and the war of the Austrian succession, ended by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle; with the death of his minister Louis gave way to his licentious propensities, and in all matters of state allowed himself to be swayed by unworthy favourites who pandered to his lusts, the most conspicuous among them being Madame de Pompadour and Dami du Barry, her successor; under them, and the corrupt court they presided over, the country went step by step to ruin, and she was powerless to withstand the military ascendancy of England, which deprived her of all her colonies both in the East and in the West; though Choiseul, his last "substantial" minister, tried hard by a family compact of the Bourbons to collect her scattered strength, the situation did not trouble Louis: "It will last all my time," he said, and he let things go; suffering from a disease contracted by vice, he was seized with confluent smallpox, and died in misery, to the relief of the nation, which was rapidly tending towards revolution (1710-1774).

LOUIS XVI. the grandson of the preceding and his successor; had in 1770 married Marie Antoinette, the youngest daughter of Maria Theresa of Austria, and a woman young, beautiful, and accomplished, in high esteem for the purity of her character; his accession was hailed with enthusiasm, and he set himself to restore the ruined finances of the country by taking into his counsel those who could best advise him in her straitened state, but these one and all found the problem an impossible one, owing to the unwillingness of the nobility to sacrifice any of their privileges for the public good; this led to the summoning of the States-General in 1789, and the outbreak of the Revolution by the fall of the Bastille in July of that year; in the midst of this Louis, well-intentioned but without strength of character, was submissive to the wishes of his court and the queen, lost his popularity by his hesitating conduct, the secret support he gave to the Emigrants (q.v.), his attempt at flight, and by his negotiations with foreign enemies, and subjected himself to persecution at the hands of the nation; he was therefore suspended from his functions, shut up in the Temple, arraigned before the Convention, and condemned to death as "guilty of conspiracy against the liberty of the nation and a crime against the general safety of the State"; he was accordingly guillotined on January 21; he protested his innocence on the scaffold, but his voice was drowned by the beating of drums; he was accompanied by the Abbé Edgeworth, his confessor, who, as he laid his head on the block, exclaimed, "Son of St. Louis, ascend to heaven" (1754-1793).

LOUIS XVII. second son of the preceding, shut up in the Temple, was, after the execution of his mother, proclaimed king by the Emigrants, and handed over in his prison to the care of one Simon, a shoemaker, in service about the prison, to bring him up in the principles of Sansculottism; Simon taught him to drink, dance, and sing the carminade; he died in prison "amid squalor and darkness," but the mystery of his fate gave rise to several impostures (1785-1796).

LOUIS XVIII. brother of Louis XVI., and called Monsieur during his brother's reign, flew from Paris and joined the Emigrants with his brother, Count d'Artois, and took up arms, which he was compelled to forgo, to wander from one foreign court to another and find refuge at last in England; on Napoleon's departure for Elba he returned to France and was installed on the throne as Louis le Désiré, but by the reappearance of the former on the scene he was obliged to seek refuge in Belgium, to return for good after the battle of Waterloo, July 9, 1815, with Talleyrand for minister and Fouché as minister of police; he reigned but a few years, his constitution being much enfeebled by disease (1755-1824).

LOUIS NAPOLEON (Napoleon III.), nephew of the first emperor, born at Paris, brought up at Augsburg and in Switzerland; became head of the family in 1832; he began a Bonapartist propaganda, and set himself to recover the throne of France; an abortive attempt in 1836 ended in a short exile in America and London, and a second at Boulogne in 1840 landed him in the fortress of Ham under sentence of perpetual imprisonment; escaping in 1846 he spent two years in England, returning to France after the Revolution of 1848; elected to the Constituent Assembly and the same year to the Presidency, he assumed the headship of the Republic, and posed as the protector of popular liberties and national prosperity; struggles with the Assembly followed; he won the favour of the army, filled the most important posts with his friends, dissolved the Constitution in 1851 (Dec. 2), was immediately re-elected President for ten years, and a year later assumed the title of Emperor; he married the Spanish Countess Eugénie in 1853, and exerted himself by public works, exhibitions, courting of the clergy, gagging of the press, and so on to strengthen his hold on the populace; in the Crimean War (1854-1856) and the Lombardy campaign (1859) he was supported by Britain; in 1860 he annexed Savoy and Nice; ten years later, suspecting the enthusiasm of the army, he plunged into war with Germany to rekindle its ardour, on a protest arising from the scheme to put Leopold of Hohenzollern on the Spanish throne; France was unprepared, disaster followed disaster; the Emperor surrendered to the Germans at Sedan, Sept. 2, 1870; a prisoner till the close of the war, he came to England in 1871 and resided with the Empress at Chislehurst till his death (1808-1873).

LOUIS PHILIPPE, king of the French from 1830 till 1848, born at Paris, eldest son of the Duke of Orleans, renounced his title with his father, and joined the National Guard and the Jacobins at the Revolution as M. Egalité; after the death of Neerwinden, 1793, where he commanded the centre, he fled to Austria and Switzerland and supported himself by teaching; after three years in the United States he came to London in 1800, and on the fall of Napoleon repaired to Paris and recovered his estates; he gained popularity with the bourgeoisie, and when the Revolution of July, 1830, overthrew Charles X. he succeeded to the throne as the elected sovereign of the people; under the "citizen king" France prospered; but his government gradually became reactionary and violent; he used his great wealth in giving bribes, tampered with trial by jury and the freedom of the press, and so raised against him both the old aristocracy and the working-classes; political agitation culminated in the Revolution of February, 1848; he was forced to abdicate and escaped with his queen to England, where he died (1778-1850).

LOUIS-D'OR, an old French gold coin which ranged in value from 16s. 7d. to 18s. 9d., and ceased to be issued in 1795.

LOUISIANA, an American State on the Gulf of Mexico, between the Mississippi and Sabine Rivers, with Arkansas on the N. and traversed diagonally by the Red River, is half upland and half alluvial; much of the lower level in the S. is marshy, subject to tidal flow or river inundation, and was covered by swampy woods, which have been reclaimed and planted with rice; on the uplands cattle are grazed, there are pine and oak forests, while the arable land is under tobacco, cotton, sugar, oranges, and figs, the principal manufactures are shingles and tanks, cotton-seed oil, and clothing; there is a State University and an agricultural and mechanical college at the capital, Baton Rouge; the Southern and Tulane Universities are in New Orleans; free schools are throughout the State. Founded by France, but held by Spain from 1762 till 1800, ceded again to France and sold to the United States by Napoleon, it was admitted to the Union in 1812. In the Civil War a hundred battles were fought within the State and New Orleans was captured, which left ruin behind; but after 1880 prosperity returned.

LOUISVILLE, on the left bank of the Ohio River, the largest city in Kentucky, is well built and regular, with a Roman Catholic cathedral, many colleges and charitable institutions; it is the largest tobacco market in the world, has pork-packing, tanning, and many other industries.

LOURDES, a French town in the dep. of the Hautes-Pyrénées, with a grotto near by in which the Virgin Mary, as is alleged, appeared to a girl of the place in 1858, and to which multitudes have since resorted in the hope of being healed of their maladies from the waters which spring up on the spot.

MACEDONIA, an ancient kingdom lying between Thrace and Illyria, the Balkans and the Aegean; mostly mountainous, but with some fertile plains; watered by the Strymon, Axios, and Hellenic rivers; was noted for its gold and silver, its oil and wine. Founded seven centuries B.C., the monarchy was raised to dignity and power by Archelaus in the 5th century. Philip II. (359 B.C.) established it yet more firmly, and his son, Alexander the Great, extended it away over half the world. His empire broke up after his death, and the Romans conquered it in 168 B.C. Aegae and Pella were its ancient capitals, Philipp, Thessalonica, and Amphipolis among its towns. After many vicissitudes during the Middle Ages it became a province of Turkey and is now partly in Bulgaria, partly in Jugoslavia, and partly in Greece.

MACEDONIANS, a sect in the early Church who taught that the Holy Ghost was inferior to the Father and the Son, so called from Macedonia, bishop of Constantinople, their leader, in the 4th century.

MACFARREN, SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER, musical author and composer, born in London; studied at the Royal Academy, and became professor there in 1884; in many operatic works he aimed at restoring old English musical characteristics, and wrote also cantatas, "Lenore" and "May-Day," the opera "Robin Hood," &c., and oratorios, of which "John the Baptist" (1873) was the first;

but his chief merit lies in his writings on theory (1813-1887).

MACHIAVELLI, NICCOLO, statesman and historian, born in Florence, of an ancient family; was secretary of the Florentine Republic from 1498 to 1512, and during that time conducted its diplomatic affairs with a skill which led to his being sent on a number of foreign embassies; he was opposed to the restoration of the Medici family, and on the return of it to power was subjected to imprisonment and torture as a conspirator, but was at last set at liberty; he spent the remainder of his life chiefly in literary labours, producing among other works a treatise on government, entitled "The Prince," the principles of which have established for him a wide notoriety (1469-1527).

MACHIAVELLISM, the doctrine taught by Machiavelli in "The Prince," that to preserve the integrity of a State the ruler should not feel himself bound by any scruple such as may suggest itself by considerations of justice and humanity; the State he regards as too precious an institution to endanger by scruples of that sort.

MAJOR, FLORA, the heroine in Scott's "Waverley."

MAISTRE, JOSEPH, COMTE DE, a keen and extreme Ultramontanist, born in Chambéry, of a noble French family; accompanied the king of Sardinia in his retreat while the French occupied Savoy in 1792; was ambassador at St. Petersburg from 1803 to 1817, when he was recalled to the home government at Turin; wrote numerous works, the chief "Du Pape" and "Solécisme de St. Petersburg" (1754-1821).

MAITLAND, WILLIAM, Scottish politician and reformer, the Secretary of Lethington of Queen Mary's reign; played a prominent part in the various movements of his time, but gained the confidence of no party; he adhered to the party of Moray as against the extreme measures of Knox, and proved a highly astute ambassador at the English Court; he connived at Rizzio's murder, but regained Mary's favour, and when she fled to England he, though joining with the new government, acted in her interest and formed a party to restore her to power; he and Kirkcaldy of Grange were forced to surrender, however, at Edinburgh in 1573, and Maitland afterwards died in Leith prison (1525-1573).

MAJOLICA, a kind of enamelled pottery imported into Italy from Majorca, known also as falience from its manufacture at Faenza, and applied also to vessels made of coloured clay in imitation.

MAJORCA, the largest of the Balearic Isles, is 130 m. N.E. of Cape San Antonio, in Spain; mountains in the N. rise to 5000 ft., their slopes covered with olives, oranges, and vines; the plains are extremely fertile, and the climate mild and equable; manufactures of cotton, silk, and shoes are the industries; the capital, Palma, is on the S. coast, at the head of a large bay of the same name.

MAJUSCULE, a capital letter found in old Latin MSS. in and before the 6th century.

MARKIZI, TAKI-ED-DIN AHMED EL, greatest Arabic historian of Egypt, born in Cairo; studied philosophy and theology, and in 1385 won the green turban; occupied several political and ecclesiastical offices; went to Damascus in 1408, but, returning to Cairo, devoted himself to history, and published among other works an important "History of Egypt and Cairo" (1364-1442).

MALABAR, a district in the W. of Madras, sloping from the Ghats down to the Indian Ocean, and extending along the coast for 145 m.; very rainy, covered with vast forests of teak; produces rice, coffee, and pepper.

MALACCA is a name given to the whole Malay Peninsula, that remarkable tongue of land 44 to 210 m. wide, stretching 800 m. S.E. from Burma between the Strait of Malacca and the Gulf of Siam; mountain ranges 7000 ft. high form the backbone; along the coast are deep mangrove swamps; the plains between yield rice, sugar-cane, cotton, and tobacco; there are forests of teak, camphor, ebony, and sandal-wood, and the richest tin mines in the world; the climate is unhealthy; the northern portion is Siamese, the southern constitutes the British Straits Settlements, of which one, on the W. coast, is specifically called Malacca; it exports tin and tapioas; the capital, Malacca, 120 m. N.W. of Singapore, was the scene of Francis Xavier's labours. MALACHI, a prophetic book of the Old Testament, the author of which is otherwise unknown, as the name, which means the "Messenger of Jehovah," occurs nowhere else in the Bible, and it is a question whether the name is that of a person or a mere appellative; the prophecy it contains appears to have been uttered 420 B.C., and refers to abuses which came to a head between the first and second visits of Nehemiah to Jerusalem; it lacks the old prophetic fire, and gives the impression that the prophetic office is ended.

MALACHITE, a bright green copper ore found in Russia and elsewhere; its main constituent is the basic carbonate of copper.

MALAGEY, ST., archbishop of Amagah in the 12th century; was a friend of St. Bernard, who wrote his Life and in whose arms he died at Clairvaux; was renowned for his sanctity as well as learning; a book of prophecies ascribed to him bearing on the Roman pontiffs is a forgery.

MALAGA, Spanish seaport, 65 m. NE. of Gibraltar, an ancient Iberian town, is now an important but declining centre of commerce; it exports olive-oil, wine, raisins, lead, &c., and manufactures cotton, linen, machinery, fine-art pottery, &c.; its magnificent climate makes it an excellent health resort.

MALAPROP, MRS., a character in Sheridan's "Rivals," noted for her blunders in the use of fine or learned words, as in the use of "allegory" for "alligator."

MALAR LAKE, large and beautiful Swedish lake, stretching 80 m. westward from Stockholm; its shores are deeply indented with bays, and the surrounding hills as well as the thousand islands it contains are well wooded.

MALAY ARCHIPELAGO, or INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO, is that group of many hundred islands stretching from the Malay Peninsula SE. to Australia between the North Pacific and the Indian Ocean, of which Borneo, Sumatra, Java, and Celebes are the largest.

MALAYS, a branch of the human family now classed among the Mongols, which inhabit the Malay Peninsula, the islands of the Indian Archipelago, as well as Madagascar and many of the islands in the Pacific; they are of a dark-brown or tawny complexion, short of stature, have flat faces, black coarse hair, and high cheek-bones; there are three classes of them, distinguished from each other in character and habits of life; the more civilised of them are Mohammedans.

MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, Indian soldier and statesman, born in Dumfriesshire; went as cadet to the Madras army in 1785, and for over 30 years was an important figure in Eastern affairs; he was ambassador to Persia 1800, governor of Mysore 1803, again in Persia as plenipotentiary in 1807 and 1810, political agent in the Deccan 1817, and governor of Bombay 1827-1830; he distinguished himself also in several wars; wrote "A History of Persia" and other historical works, and, returning to England, entered Parliament in 1831, opposed to the Reform Bill; two years later he died in London (1769-1839).

MALCOLM CANMORE, son of Duncan, whom Macbeth slew, succeeded his father in 1040 as king of Cumbria and Lothian, and in 1057, on Macbeth's death, became king of all Scotland; till 1066 his reign was peaceful, but thereafter it was one long conflict with the Normans in England; raids and counter-raids succeeded each other till, in 1091, Malcolm was forced to do homage to William Rufus; next year he lost his possessions S. of the Solway, and in 1093 he was slain in battle at Alnwick; the influence of his second wife, the saintly Margaret, did much to promote the civilisation of Scotland and to bring the Scottish Church into harmony with the rest of Christendom.

MALDIVÉ ISLANDS, a chain of several hundred tiny coral islands in the Indian Ocean stretching 550 m. southward from a point 300 m. SW. of Cape Comorin, 200 of which are inhabited; Malé is the residence of the sultan, who is a tributary of the governor of Ceylon; the natives are akin to the Singhalese, and occupy themselves gathering cowries, coco-nuts, and tortoise-shell for exportation.

MALEBOLE, the name given to the eighth circle in Dante's "Inferno," as consisting of "evil pits," which the name means, 10 in number, for those guilty of frauds: contains (1) seducers, (2) flatterers, (3) simonists, (4) soothsayers, (5) robbers and receivers of bribes, (6) hypocrites, (7) rapiers, (8) evil advisers, (9) slanderers, (10) forgers.

MALEBRANCHE, NICHOLAS, a French metaphysician, born in Paris; determined to embrace a monastic life, entered the congregation of the Oratory at the age of 22, and devoted himself to theological study, till the treatise of Descartes on "Man," falling into his hands, he gave himself up to philosophy; his famous work "De la Recherche de la Vérité" was published in 1673, the main object of which was to bridge over the gulf which separates mind from matter by the establishment of the thesis that the mind immediately perceives God, and sees all things in God, who in Himself includes the presumed irreconcilable antithesis (1638-1716).

MALESHERBES, LAMOIGNON DE, French statesman, born in Paris; a good and upright man; was twice over called to be one of Louis XVI.'s advisers, but his advice was not taken and he retired; defended Louis at his trial; pleaded for him "with eloquent want of eloquence, in broken sentences, in embarrassment and sob," and was guillotined for it; he had been censor of the press, and to his liberal-minded censorship the world owes the publication of the "Encyclopédie" (1721-1794).

MALHERBE, FRANÇOIS DE, a French lyric poet and miscellaneous writer of great industry, born in Caen; is from his correct though affected style regarded as one of the reformers of the French language (1555-1628).

MALIGNANTS, the advisers of Charles I., chief among whom were Strafford and Laud; were so called by the Parliamentarians, who blamed them for the evils of the country; the name was afterwards applied to the whole Royalist party.

MALINES, or MECHLIN, a Belgian city on the Dyle, 14 m. S. of Antwerp; has lost its old commercial activity, and is now the quiet ecclesiastical capital; masterpieces of Van Dyck and Rubens adorn its churches.

MALINES CONVERSATIONS, unofficial negotiations between Rome and the Church of England with a view to exploring the possibilities of reunion opened at Malines in 1920 and lasting over several years. Lord Halifax (q.v.) was one of the chief negotiators on the Anglican side.

MALINGERING, a name given in the army to the crime of feigning illness to evade duty or obtain a discharge.

MALLEE, the aboriginal name given to a species of scrubby eucalypt; which grows in desert districts of South Australia and Victoria; it yields the eucalyptus oil of commerce.

MALLET, DAVID, originally MALLOCH, Scottish litterateur, born in Grief; wrote several plays, and is remembered for his ballad entitled "William and Margaret"; he was a friend of Thomson, and divided with him the honour of the authorship of "Rule Britannia," the merit of which, however, is more in the music than in the poetry, about which they contested (1702-1765).

MALLOCH, WILLIAM HURRELL, author, born in Devonshire, educated at Oxford; published "The New Republic," 1870, a masterly satire on prominent contemporaries, which none of his subsequent work excelled (1849-1923).

MALMAISON, a historical château 10 m. W. of Paris; belonged originally to Richelieu; saw the last day of Josephine, whose favourite residence it was, and was the scene of the repulse of Ducrot's sortie in October, 1870.

MALORY, SIR THOMAS, flourished in the 15th century; a Warwickshire knight; was the author of "Morte d'Arthur," being a translation in prose of a labyrinthine selection of Arthurian legends (with modifications of his own), which was finished in the ninth year of Edward IV., and printed fifteen years after by Caxton "with all care."

MALPIGHI, MARCELLO, Italian anatomist and professor of Medicine; noted for his discovery of the corpuscles of the kidney and the spleen, named after him (1628-1694).

MALSTRÖM, or MÅLSTRÖM, a dangerous whirlpool off the coast of Norway, caused by the rushing of the currents of the ocean in a channel between two of the Lofoden Islands, and intensified at times by contrary winds, to the destruction often of particularly small craft caught in the eddies of it, and sometimes of whales attempting to pass through it.

MALTA, a small British island in the Mediterranean, 80 m. S. of Sicily, is a strongly fortified and a most important naval station, headquarters of the British Mediterranean fleet, and coaling-station for naval and mercantile marine; with a history of great interest, Malta was annexed to Britain in 1814. The island is treeless, and with few streams, but fertile, and has many wells. Wheat, potatoes, and fruit are largely cultivated, and flax and cotton manufactured. The people are industrious and thrifty. The Roman Catholic Church is very powerful, and has at times come into conflict with the civil power. There is a university at Valetta, and since 1887 Malta has been self-governing.

MALTEBRUN, CONRAD, geographer, born in Denmark; studied in Copenhagen, but banished for his revolutionary sympathies; settled in Paris; was the author of several geographical works, his "Geographie Universelle" the chief (1775-1826).

MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, an English economist, born near Dorking, in Surrey, is famous as the author of an "Essay on the Principle of Population," of which the first edition appeared in 1798, and the final, greatly enlarged, in 1803; the publication provoked much hostile criticism, as it propounded a doctrine which was disastrous to the accepted theory of perfectibility, and which aimed at showing how the progress of the race was held in check by the limited supply of the means of subsistence, a doctrine that admittedly anticipated that struggle for life on a larger scale which the Darwinian hypothesis requires for its "survival of the fittest" (1768-1834).

MALTSE, or malt sugar, formed in the process of brewing by the action of the enzyme diastase upon the starch in the grain; it is hydrolysed to glucose, which on fermentation produces alcohol.

MALVERN, GREAT, a watering-place in Worcester-shire, on the side of the Malvern Hills, with a clear and bracing air, a plentiful supply of water, and much frequented by invalids; the first hydro-pathic establishment in the country was opened here in 1842.

MANBA, a highly venomous large viper of South Africa, of which there are two species, the green and black; is more aggressive than most serpents and inimical to cattle.

MANBRINO, a Moorish king, celebrated in the romances of chivalry, who possessed a helmet of pure gold which rendered the wearer of it invulnerable; the possession of it was the ambition of all the paladins of Charlemagne, and it was carried off by Elinaldo, who slew the original owner; Cervantes makes Don Quixote persuade himself that he has found the enchanted helmet in a barber's brass basin.

MAMELUKES, originally slaves from the regions of the Caucasus, captured in war or bought in the market-place, who became the bodyguard of the Sultan in Egypt in the 13th century, and by-and-by his masters to the extent of ruling the country and supplying a long line of Sultans of their own election from themselves, many of them enlightened rulers, governing the country well, until their supremacy was crushed by the Sultan of Turkey in 1517; after this, however, they retained much of their power, and offered a brilliant resistance to Bonaparte at the battle of the Pyramids in 1798, who defeated them; but, recovering their power after his withdrawal and proving troublesome, they were by two treacherous massacres annihilated in 1805 and 1811 by Mehmet Ali, who became Viceroy of Egypt under the Porte.

MAMMON, the Syrian god of riches, which has given name to the modern passion for material wealth, specially conceived of as an abnegation of Christianity, the profession of which is in flat antagonism to it.

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant of enormous size found fossilised in Northern Europe and Asia in deposits together with human remains, and yielding a supply of fossil ivory; its tusks have a length sometimes exceeding 10 ft.

MAMMOTH CAVE, a cave in Kentucky, U.S., the largest in the world, several miles in extent, and rising at one point to 300 ft. in height, with numerous side branches leading into crotoches traversed by rivers, which here and there collect into lakes; the name also of another of smaller dimensions in California.

MAN, ISLE OF, a small island in the Irish Sea, 35 m. W. of Cumberland and about the same distance E. of Co. Down; from its equable climate and picturesque scenery is a favourite holiday resort; it has important lead mines at Laxey and Fardale; fishing and cattle-grazing are profitable industries; the people are Celtic, with a language and government of their own; the island is a bishopric, with the title Sodor and Man.

MANCHA, LA, an ancient province of Spain, afterwards included in New Castile, the greater part of which is occupied by Ciudad-Real; it is memorable as the scene of Don Quixote's adventures.

MANCHE, LA, the French name for the English Channel, so called from its resemblance to a sleeve, which the word in French means.

MANCHESTER, on the Irwell, in the S.E. of Lancashire, 30 m. E. of Liverpool, the centre of the English cotton-manufacturing district, with many other textile and related industries, is an ancient, rich, and prosperous city; it has many fine buildings, including a Gothic Town Hall and Assize Court-House by Waterhouse; there are a picture-gallery, philosophic and other institutions, and technical school; Owens College was the nucleus of Manchester University; the substitution of steam for hand power began here about 1750; the industrial struggles in the beginning of the 19th century were severe, and included the famous "Peterloo massacre"; the Anti-Corn-Law League originated in Manchester, and the city has given its name to a school of Liberal politicians identified with the advocacy of peace abroad, free trade, no government interference with industry, and laissez-faire principles at home; the Bridgewater Canal, 1762, the railway, 1830, and the Ship Canal to the mouth of the Mersey, 1894, mark steps in the city's progress.

MANCHESTER, EDWARD MONTAGU, EARL OF, English statesman and general, eldest son of the first earl; sided with the Parliament in the Civil War, and commanded in the army, but was censured by Cromwell for his slackness at Newbury, which he afterwards resented by opposing the policy of the Protector; he contributed to the restoration of Charles II., and was in consequence made Lord Chamberlain (1602-1671).

MANCHESTER, VICTORIA UNIVERSITY OF, founded in 1860 with Owen's College as a nucleus; until 1903 the universities of Manchester, Leeds, and Liverpool formed the Victoria University, which was disbanded in that year; degrees are granted in arts, science, engineering, medicine, and technology.

MANCHURIA, a Chinese province lying between Mongolia and Korea, with the Amur River on the N. and the Yellow Sea on the E. is five times the size of England and Wales; the northern, central, and eastern parts are mountainous; the Sungari is the largest river; the soil is fertile, producing large crops of millet, maize, hemp, &c., but the climate in winter is severe; pine forests abound; the country is rich in gold, silver, coal, and iron, but they are little wrought; beans, silk, skins, and furs are exported; the imports include textiles, metals, paper, and opium; the Manchus are the aristocracy of the province; Chinese settlers are industrious and prosperous; the chief towns are Moukden in the S., Kirin on the Sungari, and New-Chwang on the Liao River, a treaty-port since 1858; Russian influence has predominated in the province since 1890.

MANDAEANS, a community found working as skilled artisans in the Persian province of Khuzistan, and in Basra on the Euphrates; are a religious sect; called also Sabians, holding tenets gathered from Christian, Jewish, and heathen sources, resembling those of the ancient Gnostics; their priesthood admits women; their chief rite is baptism, hence their old name, Christians of St. John the Baptist.

MANDALAY, capital of Upper Burma, on the Irrawaddy, in the centre of the country, 360 m. N. of Hangoon; was seized by the British in 1885. The Araacan Pagoda, with a brazen image of the Buddha, attracts many pilgrims, and Buddhist monasteries cluster outside the town. There are silk-weaving, gold, silver, ivory, and wood work, gong-casting and sword-making industries. Great fires raged in it in 1886 and 1892.

MANDARIN, the name given by foreigners (derived from the Portuguese and signifying to "command") to Chinese official functionaries, of which there were some nine orders, distinguished by the buttons on their caps; they were appointed chiefly for their possession of the requisite qualifications for the military or civil offices to which they aspired.

MANDATED TERRITORIES, those lands which as a result of the Great War ceased to be under the sovereignty of the Central Powers and which the League of Nations mandated to various countries, Great Britain received mandates for Iraq, Palestine, and Transjordan.

MANDEVELLE, BERNARD DE, a cynical writer, born in Dordrecht, Holland; bred to medicine; came to London to practise; wrote in racy English the "Fable of the Bees," intended to show, as Stopford Brooke says, how the "vices of society are the foundation of civilisation," or as Professor Saintsbury says, how "vice makes some bees happy, and virtue makes them miserable"; the latter calls him "The Diogenes of English Philosophy"; he affirmed that "private vices are public benefits," and reduced virtue into a form of selfishness; his satire is directed against the ethics of Shaftesbury (q.v.) (1670-1733).

MANDEVELLE, SIR JOHN, English adventurer, who from his own account travelled over thirty years in the East, and wrote a narrative of the marvels he experienced in a book of voyages and travels published in 1586; the authorship of this book has been questioned, it being affirmed that the actual author was Jean de Burgoyne, of Liège, while there is evidence that much of the matter has been borrowed from other narratives.

MANDINGOES, a negro race in Senegambia, and farther inland around the Quorra; are numerous and powerful.

MANES, the general name given by the Romans to the departed spirits of good men, who are conceived of as dwelling in the nether world, and as now and again ascending to the upper.

MANES, MANI, or CUBRICUS, the founder of Manichæism (q.v.), a native of Persia, who died A.D. 274.

MANETHO, an Egyptian priest and historian, of the 3rd century B.C.; wrote a history of Egypt in Greek, derived from study of sacred monumental inscriptions, which is extant only in fragments.

MANFRED, king of the Two Sicilies, son of the Emperor Frederick II., who had to struggle for his birthright with three Popes, Innocent IV., Alexander IV., and Urban IV., the last of whom excommunicated him, as his predecessors had done, and bestowed his dominions on Charles of Anjou; coming into conflict with Charles at Benevento he fell, and was denied Christian burial, though his nobles pleaded for the privilege (1231-1266).

MANFRED, COUNT, hero of a poem by Byron; sold himself to the Prince of Darkness; lived in solitude on the Alps, estranged from all sympathy with others, and was carried off in the end by the master whom he had served.

MANGANESE, a grey, hard, brittle metal which forms useful alloys with iron and copper, e.g. manganese steel, cupromanganese, and Heusler's alloy.

MANGANIN, an alloy of 7 parts of copper with 1 part of manganese and a small proportion of nickel; it is used for resistance coils in electricity, as the conductivity varies very little with change of temperature.

MANHATTAN, a long island at the mouth of the Hudson, on which a great part of New York stands. MANICHÆISM, the creed which ascribes the created universe to two antagonistic principles, the one essentially good—God, spirit, light; the other essentially evil—the devil, matter, darkness; and this name is applied to every system founded on the like dualism. Mani, or Manes (q.v.), the founder of it, appears to have borrowed his system in great part from Zoroaster.

MANILA, capital of the Philippine Islands; at the head of a great bay on the W. coast of Luzon; is hot, but not unhealthy; suffers severely from storms and earthquakes, and is largely built of wood. It has a cathedral, university, and observatory. Its only industry is cigar-making, but the exports include also manila hemp, sugar, and coffee. The population, chiefly Tagals, includes Chinese, Spaniards and Europeans. In the Spanish-American War of 1898 Admiral Dewey captured the city.

MANIN, DANIEL, an illustrious Italian patriot, born in Venice, of Jewish birth; bred for the bar, and practised at it; became President of the Venetian Republic in 1848, and was one of the most distinguished opponents of the domination of Austria; died at Paris, a teacher of Italian (1804-1857).

MANITOBA, a partially developed inland province of Canada, somewhat larger than England and Wales; is square in shape, with the United States on its S. border, Saskatchewan on the N. and W., and Ontario on the E.; a level prairie and arable country, scantily wooded but well watered, having three large lakes, Winnipeg, Winnipegosis, and Manitoba, and three large rivers, Assiniboine, Souris, and Red River. The climate is dry and healthy, though subject to great extremes of temperature; comparatively little snow falls; the soil is very fertile, producing fine wheat; mixed farming, dairy, cattle, and sheep farming are carried on successfully. Land is cheap. There is no mineral wealth; coal is found in the S.; fishing is pursued on the lakes and rivers. Constituted a province in 1870, Manitoba was the scene of the Riel rebellion, quelled that same year. The government is vested in a lieutenant-governor, an executive council, and a single chamber. The capital is Winnipeg, the seat of a university and of extensive flour-mills. The other chief towns are Brandon, a market town, and Portage-la-Prairie, with a brewery, flour and paper mills.

MANITOU, among the North American Indians the "great spirit," represented as an animal which is revealed to the head of a tribe as the guardian spirit of it, and therefore an object of sacred regard. See TOTEMISM.

MANLIUS, MARCUS, surnamed CAPTOLINUS, a Roman hero who, in 390 B.C., saved Rome from an attack of the Gauls, and who was afterwards for treason thrown down the Tarpelan Rock.

MANN, HORACE, American educationist, born in Massachusetts; was devoted to the cause of education as well as that of anti-slavery (1790-1859).

MANNA, the food which the Israelites were miraculously fed in the wilderness, a term said to mean "What is this?" being the expression of surprise of the Israelites on first seeing it, but more credibly derived from the Hebrew mān, a gift; identified with a species of tamarisk from the stem of which exudes a sugary sap.

MANHEIM, on the Rhine, 56 m. above Mainz; the chief commercial centre of Baden; has manufactures of tobacco, india-rubber, and iron goods, and a growing river trade. An old historical city, it was formerly capital of the Rhenish Palatinate, and a resort of Protestant refugees.

MANNING, HENRY EDWARD, cardinal, born in Hertfordshire; Fellow of Merton, Oxford, and a leader in the Tractarian Movement there; became rector in Sussex; married, and became Archdeacon of Chichester; dissatisfied with the state of matters in the Church of England, in 1851 he joined the Church of Rome, became Archbishop of Westminster in 1865, and Cardinal in 1875; took interest in social matters as well as the Catholic propaganda (1808-1892).

MANTRA, the name given to hymns from the Veda of the Hindus, the repetition of which is supposed to have the effect of a charm.

MANTUA, the strongest fortress in Italy, in SE. Lombardy, on two islands in the river Mincio, 83 m. E. of Milan, is a somewhat gloomy and unhealthy town, with many heavy mediæval buildings; there are salt-petre refineries, weaving and tanning industries. Virgil was born here in 70 A.C. The town was Austrian in the 18th century, but ceded to Italy 1806.

MANTUAN SWAN, a name given to the Roman poet Virgil, from his having been a native of Mantua, in N. Italy.

MANU, CODE OF, one of the sacred books of the Hindus, in which is expounded the doctrine of Brahminism, inculcating "sound, solid, and practical morality," and containing evidence of the progress of civilisation among the Aryans from their first establishment in the valley of the Ganges. Manu, the alleged author, appears to have been a primitive mythological personage, conceived of as the ancestor and legislator of the human race, and as having manifested himself through long ages in a series of incarnations.

MANZONI, ALESSANDRO, Italian poet and novelist, born in Milan; began a sceptic, but became a devout Catholic; wrote a volume of hymns, entitled "Inni Sacri," and a tragedy, "Adelchi," his masterpiece and admired by Goethe, as also a prose fiction, "I Promessi Sposi," which spread his name over Europe; in 1860 was made a senator of the kingdom of Italy, and was visited by Garibaldi in 1862; he was no less distinguished as a man than as an author (1775-1873).

MAORI WARS, conflicts between the settlers of New Zealand and the aborigines over boundaries. They were fought from 1843-1847, 1863-1864, and 1869-1870.

MAORIS, the natives of New Zealand, a Polynesian race, who probably derived an aboriginal; are distinguished for their bravery; are governed by chiefs, and speak a rich, sonorous language, while their oral literature contains interesting legends and traditions; tattooing has long been a feature of the race; they are the most vigorous and energetic of all the South Sea Islanders.

MAR, a district in S. Aberdeenshire, between the Don and the Dee, has given a title to many earls; one was regent of Scotland in 1572, another, nicknamed "Hobbling Joan," led the Jacobite rising of 1715; on the death without issue of the earl in 1866 the question of succession was raised; the Committee of Privileges in 1875 granted it to the Earl of Kellie, thereafter Mar and Kellie, and a Bill in Parliament awarded it to his nephew, who thus became Earl of Mar.

MARABOUTS, a sect of religious devotees of a priestly order much venerated in North Africa, believed to possess supernatural power, particularly in curing diseases, and exercising at times considerable political influence; their supernatural power appears to come to them by inheritance.

MARACAYBO, a Venezuelan town and fortress on the W. shore of the outlet of Lake Maracaybo; has handsome streets and buildings, and exports coffee and valuable woods; the lake of Maracaybo is a large fresh-water lake in the W. of Venezuela, connected with the Gulf of Maracaybo by a wide strait, across which stretches an effective bar.

MARANATHA (H. the Lord cometh to judge), a form of anathema in use among the Jews.

MARARON, one of the head-waters of the Amazon, rising in Lake Lauricocha, Peru, and flowing N. and E. till it joins the Ucayali and forms the Amazon; the name is sometimes given to the whole river.

MARAT, JEAN PAUL, a fanatical democrat, born in Nîmes, his father an Italian, his mother a Genevese; studied and practised medicine, came to Paris as horse-leech to Count d'Artois; became infected with the revolutionary fever, and had one fixed idea: "Give me," he said, "two hundred Naples braves, armed each with a good dirk, and with them I will traverse France and accomplish the Revolution," that is, by wholesale massacre of the aristocrats; he had more than once to flee for his life, and one time found shelter in the sewers of Paris, contracting thereby a loathsome skin disease; in the Convention he was an ardent Jacobin, and his acquittal after a trial under the Girondist government strengthened the position of his party; he was assassinated one evening as he sat in his bath by Charlotte Corday (q.v.), but his body was buried with honours in the Pantheon by a patriot people, "that of Mirabeau flung out to make room for him," to be some few months after himself cast out with execration (1743-1793).

MARATHON, a village, 22 m. N.E. of Athens, on the sea border of a plain where the Greeks under Miltiades in a world-famous occasion defeated the Persians under Darius in 490 B.C.; the plain on which the battle was fought extends between mountains on the W. and the sea on the E.

MARBURG, quaint university town of Hesse-Nassau, on the Lahn, 40 m. N.E. of Limburg; has many old buildings; its Gothic church contains St. Elizabeth's tomb; Luther and Zwingli held a conference in the castle, 1529; William Tyndale and Patrick Hamilton were students at its university, which has a fine library.

MARCEAU, FRANÇOIS SÉVERIN, French general, born in Chartres; distinguished himself in the Republican army in La Vendée and Fleurus, and was mortally wounded at Alenkichen when covering a retreat of the French army (1768-1798).

MARCELLO, BENEDETTO, an Italian musical composer; composed music for an Italian version of the Psalms (1686-1739).

MARCELLUS, CLAUDIUS, Roman general; in a war with the Gauls killed their chief Viridomarus with his own hands, whose spoils he dedicated as spolia opima (q.v.) to Jupiter; took Syracuse, which long baffled him through the skill of Archimedes, and fell fighting against Hannibal, 208 B.C.; he was five times consul though but of plebeian birth.

MARCELLUS, MARCUS, son of Octavia, the sister of Augustus, who had named him his heir; his decease at 20 was mourned as a public calamity, and inspired Virgil to pen his well-known lament over his death in the sixth book of the "Æneid" (43-23 B.C.).

MARCEY, MRS. JANE, authoress, born in Geneva; married a Swiss doctor settled in London; wrote elementary text-books on chemistry (from which Faraday gained his first knowledge), political economy, natural philosophy, &c., under the title "Conversations," and her best work, "Stories for Young Children" (1789-1858).

MARCH, the third month of our year; was before 1752 reckoned first month as in the Roman calendar, the legal year beginning on the 25th; it is proverbially stormy, and is the season of the spring equinox; it was dedicated to the Roman god Mars, whence the name.

MARCHING WATCH, THE, a London pageant which began at sunset and went on till sunrise, but as it took place only on Midsummer Eve it did not last much longer than the Lord Mayor's Show. It consisted of two thousand men decorated with flowers and ribbons and officered by peers and knights, and marched about amid a blaze of cresnet lights and bonfires, while the spectators were regaled, free of cost to them, with food and drink. The last march was in 1549.

MARCHAND, GENERAL, a French emissary in Africa; was sent in 1890 to explore the sources of the Niger and other districts, and was afterwards appointed to push on to the Nile, where he arrived in 1898, hoisting the French flag by the way, and finally at Fashoda, from which he was recalled; with extreme disgust he was obliged to retire and find his way back to France (1861-).

MARCHESE, BLANCHE, Baroness Caccamist, French singer, born in Paris; appeared in Wagnerian and other operas in Berlin, Prague, Paris, and London with great success; afterwards taught singing (1826-1913).

MARCION, a heretic of the 2nd century, born in Sinope, in Pontus, who, convinced that the traditional records of Christianity had been tampered with, sought to restore Christianity to its original purity, taking his stand on the words of Christ and the interpretation of St. Paul as the only true apostle; he held that an ascetic life was of the essence of Christianity, and he had a following called Marcionites, most of whom ultimately were absorbed by the Manichæans.

MARCONI, GUGLIELMO, Italian inventor, the first to make the discoveries of Lodge and Hertz practicable on a large scale; succeeded in sending radio-signals across the Channel in 1899, and the Atlantic in 1901; awarded the Nobel Prize in 1909 (1874-).

MARCUS AURELIUS. See ANTONINUS.

MARDI GRAS, in France the concluding day of the Lent carnival, marked by a procession through the streets of a prize ox, a burlesque of an old Roman sacrificial custom, together with mock priests, a band, and other merry-makers.

MAREMMA, a malarial coast district of Italy, N. of the Campagna, stretching from Orbitello to Guardafallo, with few villages or roads. Part of it was improved by draining and planting (1824-1844), and the inhabitants come down from the neighbouring Apennine slopes in summer to cultivate it; healthier in winter, it affords good pasturage.

MARENGO, a village of N. Italy, S.E. of Alessandria, where Napoleon defeated the Austrians on June 14, 1800.

MAREOTIS LAKE, a lagoon in the N. of Egypt, 40 m. long by 18 m. broad, separated from the Mediterranean by a tongue of land on which part of Alexandria is situated.

MARGARET, queen of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, was the daughter of Waldemar IV. of Denmark, whose crown, on his death in 1375, she received in trust for her son Olaf; her husband, Haakon VII. of Norway, died in 1380, and left her queen; Olaf died 1387, when she named her grand-nephew, Eric of Pomerania, her heir; the Swedes deposed their king next year, and offered Margaret the throne; she accepted it, put down all resistance, and ultimately brought about the Union of Calmar (1397), which provided for the perpetual union of the three crowns; her energy and force of character won for her the title of "Semiramis of the North" (1353-1412).

MARGARET, a simple, innocent girl in Goethe's "Faust," who is the victim of a tragic fatality; Faust meets her as she comes from church, falls in love with her, and seduces her; she plays the infant born, is convicted and condemned to death, and loses her reason; Faust would fain save her, but he is hurried away by Mephistopheles, and she is left to her fate.

MARGARET, ST., the type of female innocence, represented as a beautiful young maiden bearing the palm and crown of a martyr and attended by a dragon; is patron saint against the pains of childbirth. Festi. d. July 30.

MARGARET, ST., queen of Scotland, wife of Malcolm Canmore, and sister of Edgar Atheling, born in Hungary; brought up at the court of Edward the Confessor; after the conquest sought refuge in Scotland, and, winning the heart of the Scottish king, was married to him at Dunfermline; was a woman of beautiful character and great piety, and did much to civilise the country by her devotion and example; she died in Edinburgh Castle, and was in 1250 canonised by Innocent IV.; Lanfranc had been her spiritual instructor (1047-1098).

MARGARET OF ANGOULÊME, queen of Navarre, sister of Francis I., married in 1527 Henri d'Albret, king of Navarre, by whom she became the mother of Jeanne d'Albret (q.v.); protected the Protestants, and encouraged learning and the arts; she left a collection of novels, under the name of "Heptameron," and a number of interesting letters, as well as some poems (1492-1549).

MARGARET OF ANJOU, queen of Henry VI. of England, and daughter of the good King René of Anjou; was distinguished for the courage she displayed during the Wars of the Roses, though, after a struggle of nearly twenty years, she was defeated at Tewkesbury and committed to the Tower, from which, after four years of incarceration, she was afterwards released by ransom (1430-1482).

MARGARET OF VALOIS, third daughter of Henry II. of France and Catherine de' Medici; married Henry IV., by whom she was divorced for her immoral conduct (1558-1616).

MARGATE, seaport and watering-place, 3 m. W. of the North Foreland, Kent, is with its firm sands, bathing facilities, and various attractions a favourite resort of London holiday-makers. Its church-tower, 136 ft., is a prominent landmark. There are large almshouses and orphanages, and other charitable institutions.

MAREINECKE, PHILIPP KONRAD, a German theologian, born in Hildesheim; professor successively at Erlangen, Heidelberg, and Berlin; was a Hegelian in philosophy; his chief works, a "System of Catholicism" and a "History of the German Reformation" (1780-1846).

MARIA LOUISA, empress of France, daughter of Francis I., Emperor of Austria; was married to Napoleon in 1810 after the divorce of Josephine, and bore him a son, who was called King of Rome; after Napoleon's death she became the wife of Count von Neipperg (1791-1847).

MARIA THERESA, empress of Austria, daughter of the Emperor Charles VI., a queenly woman; was in 1788 married to Francis of Lorraine; ascended the throne in 1740 on the death of her father, associating her husband with her in the government under the title of Francis I.; no sooner had she done so than, despite the Pragmatic Sanction (q.v.), which assured her of her dominions in their integrity, she was assailed by claimants one for this and one for another portion of them, in particular by Frederick the Great, who by force of arms wrested Silesia from her and kept it fast; the war thus occasioned is known as the war of the Austrian Succession, which lasted seven years, and was concluded by the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748; this peace, however, was soon broken, and Maria, backed by France and counselled by Von Kaunitz, renewed hostilities in the hope of compelling Frederick to restore what he had taken; all in vain, for the end of this war, known as the Seven Years' War, was to leave Frederick still in possession of the territory which he had sliced from her empire as in the former; in the interim of these wars Maria devoted her attention to the welfare of her subjects, who were conspicuously loyal to her, and before the end of her reign she saw what she had lost made up to her in a measure by the partition of Poland, in which she took part (1717-1780).

MARIAMNE, the wife of Herod the Great, whom he put to death on suspicion of her unfaithfulness.

MARIANA, JUAN, Spanish historian and political philosopher, born in Talavera; joined the Jesuits in 1554, and taught in their colleges in Rome, Sicily, and Paris; returning to Toledo, he gave himself to literature; his "History of Spain" appeared in 1592 and 1601; for certain theological writings he incurred persecution, and his greatest work, "De Regis et Regis Institutione," in which he defended the right of the people to cast out a tyrant, was condemned by the general of his order (1536-1624).

MARIE ANTOINETTE, queen of France, fourth daughter of Maria Theresa; was married in 1770 to the dauphin of France, who in 1774 succeeded to the throne as Louis XVI.; was a beautiful woman, but indiscreet in her behaviour; had made herself unpopular and impotent for good when the Revolution broke out; when matters became serious the queenliness of her nature revealed itself, but it was in haughty defiance of the million-headed monster that was bellowing at her feet; the heroism she showed at this crisis the general mass of the people could not appreciate, though it won the homage of such men as Mirabeau and Darnay; all she wanted was a wise adviser, for she had courage to follow any course which she could be persuaded to see was right; in Mirabeau she had one who could have guided her, but by his death in 1791 she was left to herself, and the course she took was fatal to all the interests she had at heart; fatality followed fatality: first she saw her husband hurried off to the guillotine, and then she followed herself, accused of intrigues and fomenting civil war; she and her husband suffered as the representatives of the misgovernment of France for centuries before they were born, and were left with a burden on their shoulders which they could not bear and under which they were crushed to death (1758-1793).

MARIE DE FRANCE, a poetess and fabulist of Henry III.'s time; her fables are translations into French from an English version of old Greek tales; a greater work was her "Fables," consisting of 12 or 14 beautiful narratives in French verse.

MARIE DE' MEDICI, daughter of the Grand-Duke of Tuscany, born in Florence; was married to Henry IV. of France in 1600, with whom she lived unhappily till his murder in 1610; she was then resent for seven years; in 1617 her son assumed power as Louis XIII.; she was for two years banished from the court, and on her return so intrigued as to bring about her imprisonment in 1631; though a lover of art she was neither good wife nor good queen; escaping from confinement, she died in destitution at Cologne (1573-1642).

MARIENBAD, or MARIANSKELAZNE, a high-lying Czechoslovakian watering-place, 18 m. S. of Carlsbad; it is much frequented for its saline springs.

MARIETTE PASHA, FRANÇOIS AUGUSTE FÉDÉRIC, Egyptologist, born in Boulogne; became professor in the college there in 1841, entered the Egyptian department of the Louvre in 1849, and next year set out for Egypt; eight years later he was made keeper of the monuments to the Egyptian government, and in 1870 was made a pasha; he died at Cairo; he made many valuable discoveries and excavations, among which were the burial-place of the Apis bulls, the Sphinx monument, and many temples (1821-1881).

MARIO, GIUSEPPE, Marquis of Candia, a celebrated Italian tenor, born in Cagliari; appeared in opera in Paris and London for many years; married Giulia Grisi, the singer (1808-1883).

MARIOTTE, EDMÉ, a French physicist, born in Dijon; discoverer of the law named after him, that the volume of a gas is inversely as the pressure; it bears the name of Mariotte's law on the Continent and Boyle's in England (1630-1684).

MARIS, JACOB, Dutch artist. He studied first at the Hague Academy, the town of his and his brothers' birth, and later in Antwerp and Paris. Landscape painting with a fine reproduction of atmospheric conditions was his forte (1837-1899).

MARIS, MATTHEW, Dutch artist, brother of the preceding. He too studied at the Hague, Antwerp, and Paris, and specialised in mystic painting; he died in London, where he had spent several years of his life (1835-1917).

MARIS, WILLIAM, Dutch artist, brother of the two preceding, under whom he chiefly studied. He is noted for his pastoral landscapes and has work in the National Gallery (1844-1910).

MARIUS, GAIVS, a celebrated Roman general, born near Arpinum, uncle by marriage to Julius Cæsar, head of the popular party, and the rival of Sulla; conquered the Teutons and the Cimbr in Gaul, and made a triumphal entry into Rome; having obtained command of the war against Mithridates, Sulla marched upon the city and drove his rival beyond the walls; having fled the city, Marius was discovered hiding in a marsh, cast into prison, and condemned to die; to the slave sent to execute the sentence he drew himself haughtily up and exclaimed, "Caltiff, dare you slay Gaius Marius?" and the executioner fled in terror of his life and left his sword behind him; Marius was allowed to escape; finding his way to Africa, he took up his quarters at Carthage, but the Roman prætor ordered him off; he later returned to Rome, and with Cinna made the streets of the city run with the blood of the partisans of Sulla; a soldier of undoubted ability, he reorganised the Roman army and made it a power in the field (155-86 a.c.).

MARIVAUX, PIERRE CHAMBLAIN DE, a French dramatist and novelist, born in Paris; was a man of subtle wit, as his writings reveal, while an affection of style was named Marivaudage after him; his fame rests on his novels rather than his dramas (1688-1763).

MARK, GOSPEL ACCORDING TO, is mainly a narrative of the doings of Christ and of the events of His life in their historical sequence; moves on at an even pace, abounds in graphic touches, and adds minute traits as if by an eye-witness; it represents Christ as the Son of man, but manifesting Himself by such signs and wonders as to show that He was also the Son of God; it is written for Gentile Christians and not for Jewish, and hence little stress is laid on Old Testament fulfillments or reference made to those antipathetic to Christianity which had a merely Jewish root.

MARK, JOHN, the author of the second Gospel, the son of Mary, Barnabas' sister, who ministered to Christ, and whose house in Jerusalem was a place of resort for the disciples of Christ after the resurrection; accompanied Paul and his uncle on their first missionary journey, afterwards accompanied Peter, who calls him "my son," and to him it is thought Mark is indebted for his Gospel narrative; he is regarded as the founder of the Coptic Church, and his body is said to have been buried in Venice, of which he is the patron saint, the cathedral of that city being named St. Mark's after him; he is represented in Christian art as a man in the prime of life accompanied by a winged lion, with his Gospel in his left hand and a pen in his right.

MARK ANTONY. See ANTONIUS, MARCUS.

MARK TWAIN. See CLEMENS.

MARKHAM, SIR CLEMENTS ROBERT, traveller and author, born near York, son of a clergyman; served in the navy from 1841 to 1851, taking part in the Franklin search expedition; 1852-1854 he spent exploring Peru; he introduced the cinchona plant to India 1860, became secretary to the Royal Geographical Society 1863, served as geographer to the Abyssinian Expedition of 1867-1868, and was then put at the head of the Geographical Department of the India Office; among many books of travels may be named "The Threshold of the Unknown Region," and among biographies "Columbus" (1830-1816).

MARKEWICZ, CONSTANCE GEORGINE, COUNTESS, Irish politician. She married a Polish count in 1900, took an active part in the 1916 Dublin rebellion, for which she was sent to prison. She was the first woman to be elected to the British House of Commons, being returned for St. Patrick's, Dublin, in December, 1918, but she never took the oath or her seat. An active supporter of De Valera, she was imprisoned before and after the formation of the Irish Free State (1884-1927).

MARLBOROUGH, on the Kennet, 38 m. E. of Bristol, a Whitshire market-town, with sack and rope making, brewing, and tanning industries; has an old Norman church, the remains of an old royal residence, and a college, founded in 1843 originally for sons of clergymen.

MARLBOROUGH, JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF, soldier and statesman, born in Devonshire; joined the Guards as ensign, and served in Tangiers in 1667; sent in command of a company to help Louis XIV. in his Dutch wars, his courage and ability won him a colonelcy; he married Sarah Jennings in 1678, and seven years later became Baron Churchill on James II.'s succession; as general he was employed in putting down Monmouth's rebellion; he succeeded to William of Orange in 1688, and received from him the earldom of Marlborough; he was in disfavour from 1694 till the outbreak of the Spanish Succession War, in which he gained his great renown; beginning by driving the Spaniards from the Netherlands in 1702, he won a series of important victories—Blenheim 1704, Ramillies 1706, Oudenard 1708, and Malplaquet 1709—and contributed to enhance the military glory of England; Queen Anne loaded him with honours; large sums of money, Woodstock estate, Blenheim Palace, and a dukedom were bestowed on him; his wife was the Queen's closest friend, and the duke and duchess virtually governed the country till in 1711 the Queen threw off their influence, and charges of misappropriation of funds forced the duke into retirement; he was restored to many of his offices by George I. in 1714, but for the last six years of his life he sank into imbecility; one of England's greatest generals, he was also one of her meanest men (1650-1722).

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, English dramatist and poet, precursor of Shakespeare; son of a shoemaker at Canterbury; besides a love poem entitled "Hero and Leander," he was the author of seven plays, "Tamburlaine," in two parts, "Doctor Faustus," "The Jew of Malta," "Edward the Second," "The Massacre of Paris," and "Dido," the first four being romantic plays, the fifth a chronicle play, and the last two offering no particular talent; he dealt solely in tragedy, and was too devoid of humour to attempt comedy; was killed, it is said, at Deptford in a brawl (1584-1593).

MARMONT, AUGUSTE FREDERIC, DUKE OF RAGUSA and marshal of France, served under Napoleon, and distinguished himself on many a battlefield; received the title of duke for his successful defence of Ragusa against the Russians in 1806; was present at Wagram, Lützen, Bautzen, and Dresden, but came to terms with the allies after the taking of Paris, which led to Napoleon's abdication in 1814; obliged to flee on Napoleon's return, he came back to France and gave his support to the Bourbons; left Memoirs (1774-1852).

MARMONTEL, JEAN FRANÇOIS, French writer, born in Bort; author of "Les Incas," "Bélisaire," and "Contes Moraux"; "was," says Ruskin, "a peasant's son, who made his way into Parisian society by gentleness, wit, and a dainty and candid literary power; he became one of the humblest yet honestest scholars at the court of Louis XV., and wrote pretty, yet wise, sentimental stories in finished French, the sayings and thoughts in them, in their fine tremulous way, perfect like the blossoming heads of grass in May"; was secretary to the Academy and historiographer of France (1728-1799).

MARMORA, SEA OF, 175 m. long and 50 broad, lies between Europe and Asia Minor, opening into the Aegean through the Dardanelles and into the Baltic through the Bosphorus; the Gulf of Imdid indents the eastern coast; Marmora, the largest island, has marble and alabaster quarries.

MARNE and HAUTE-MARNE, contiguous departments in the N.E. of France, in the upper basin of the Marne River; in both cereals, potatoes, and wine are the chief products, the best champagne coming from the N. In the former, capital Châlons-sur-Marne, building stone is quarried; there are metal works and tanneries; in the latter, capital Chaumont, are valuable iron mines and manufactures of cutlery and gloves. It was the scene of three important battles in the Great War. In September, 1914, there began the first Allied offensive, which stayed the German advance on Paris. (On July 15, 1918, the Germans under Ludendorff launched their final attack here, which, failing, led to the Allied offensive that was the final phase of the war.)

MAROCCHETTI, CARLO, BARON, Italian sculptor, born in Turin; after working in Paris, came to this country in 1849, and executed several public statues, one of Queen Victoria among others (1805-1868).

MARONITES, a sect of Syrian Christians, numbering 200,000, dwelling on the eastern slopes of Lebanon, where they settled in the 7th century, and who joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1445, while retaining much of their primitive character; they maintained a long sanguinary rivalry with their neighbours the Druses (q.v.).

MAROONS, the name given to wild negro bands in Jamaica and Guiana; those in Jamaica left behind by the Spaniards on the conquest of the island by the English, 1655, escaped to the hills, and continued unsubdued till 1795; in Guiana they still maintain independent communities. To maroon a seaman is to leave him alone on an uninhabited island, or adrift in a boat.

MAROT, CLÉMENT, French poet, born in Cahors; was valet-de-chambre to Margaret of Angoulême; was a man of ready wit and a satirical writer, the exercise of which often brought him into trouble; his poems, which consist of elegies, epistles, rondeaux, madrigals, and ballads, have left their impress on both the language and the literature of France (1496-1544).

MARPRELATE TRACTS, a series of clever but scurrilous tracts published under the name of Martin Marprelate, but the work of different writers in the time of Elizabeth, aimed against prelacy; they gave rise to great excitement and some inquisition as to their authorship.

MARQUE. See LETTER OF MARQUE.

MARQUESAS ISLANDS, a group of 13 small volcanic mountainous islands in the S. Pacific, 3800 m. W. of Peru, under French protection since 1842; are peopled by a handsome but savage race, which is rapidly dying out; Chinese immigrants grow cotton; the more southerly were discovered by Mendana in 1595, the more northerly by Ingraham, an American, in 1791.

MARQUETTE, JACQUES (PÈRE), French missionary and explorer, born in Laon; a Jesuit, he went to Canada in 1666; in 1673 accompanied Joliet in the exploration of the Mississippi, re-discovering the river; died while on a missionary journey to the Indians of the Illinois region (1637-1675).

MARROW CONTROVERSY, a theological controversy which arose in Scotland in the 18th century over the teaching of a book entitled "The Marrow of Modern Divinity," and which led to a secession from the Established Church on the part of the "Marrow men," as the supporters of the doctrine of the book were called. It contained an assertion of the evangelical doctrine of free grace, which was condemned by the Assembly, and for maintaining which the "Marrow men," headed by the Erskines, were deposed in 1733, leading to the formation of the Secession Church.

MARRYAT, FREDERICK, novelist, born in Westminster; after service in the royal navy, which he entered in 1806, and in which he attained the rank of commandant, he retired in 1830, and commenced a series of novels: "Frank Mildmay," the first, proving a success, he resolved to devote the rest of his life to literature; his novels were numerous, all of interest for their character sketches and adventures, "Peter Simple" and "Midshipman Easy" being reckoned the best (1792-1848).

MARS, the exterior planet of the Solar system, nearest the earth, of one-half its diameter, with a mean distance from the sun of 141,000,000 m., round which it takes 686 days to revolve, in a somewhat eccentric orbit, and 24½ hours to revolve on its own axis, which inclines to its equator at an angle of 29°; examination of it shows that there is four times as much land as water in it, the so-called "seas" being now accepted as tracts of vegetation, apparently linked by a series of canals, the latter not actually defined as of objective existence; it is accompanied by two satellites, an outer making a revolution round it in 30 hours 18 minutes, and an inner in 7 hours and 38 minutes; they are the smallest heavenly bodies known to science.

MARS, the Roman god of war, the reputed father of Romulus, and the recognised protector of the Roman State, identified at length with the Greek Ares.

MARSEILLAISE, THE, the hymn or march of the French republicans, composed, both words and music, at Strasbourg by Rouget de Lisle one night in April, 1792, and sung by the 600 volunteers from Marseilles who entered Paris on July 30 following. Prohibited during the monarchy and empire, it became eventually the national anthem of France.

MARSEILLES, third city and first seaport of France, on the shore of the Gulf of Lyons, 27 m. E. of the mouth of the Rhône; has extensive dock accommodation; does great trade in wheat, oil, wine, sugar, textiles, and coal, and manufactures soap, soda, macaroni, and iron; there is a cathedral, picture-gallery, museum, and library, schools of science and art; founded by colonists from Asia Minor in 600 B.C., it was a Greek city till 300 B.C.; after the days of Rome it had many vicissitudes, falling finally to France in 1575, and losing its privilege as a free port in 1660; always a Radical city, it proclaimed the Commune in 1871; a cholera plague devastated it in 1855; six years later great sanitary improvements were begun; Thiers and Puyet were born here.

MARSHAL FORWARDS, a name given to Blücher (q.v.) for the celerity of his movements and the dash of his attack.

MARSHALL, JOHN, an American judge; served in the army during the first years of the American War; afterwards entered the legal profession and became Chief Justice of the United States; was an authority on constitutional law (1755-1835).

MARSTON, JOHN, English dramatist, so called, was more of a poet than a dramatist, and his dramas are remembered chiefly for the poetic passages they contain; his masterpiece is a comedy entitled "What You Will" (1575-1634).

MARSTON, JOHN WESTLAND, dramatist, born in Boston, Lincolnshire; wrote several dramas, "Strathmore" and "Marie de Méraule" among the number (1810-1890).

MARSTON, PHILIP BOURKE, poet, son of preceding; wrote three volumes of verse, admitted by Rossetti and Swinburne; was blind from boyhood (1850-1887).

MARSTON MOOR, 7 m. W. of York; here Cromwell and Fairfax defeated the Royalists under Prince Rupert, July 2, 1644, and so won the north of England for the Parliament.

MARSUPIALS, an order of mammals practically restricted to Australasia, e.g. kangaroo, wombat, and bandicoot.

MARSYAS, in Greek mythology, a Phrygian peasant, who, having found a flute which Athena had thrown away because playing on it disfigured her face, and which, as still inspired by the breath of the goddess, yielded sweet tones when he put his lips to it, one day challenged Apollo to a contest, the condition being that the vanquished should pay whatever penalty the victor might impose on him; Apollo played on the lyre and the boar on the flute, when the Muses, who were umpires, assigned the palm to the former; upon this Apollo caught his rival up, bound him to a tree, and flayed him alive for his temerity.

MARTELLI TOWERS, round towers of strong build, erected as a defence at one time off the low shores of Sussex, Suffolk, and Kent; they are of Italian origin, being named after a tower on Cape Martello, in Corsica; there is one off the harbour of Leith.

MARTIAL (MARCUS VALERUS MARTIALIS), a Latin poet, born in Bilbilis, in Spain; went to Rome, stayed there, favoured of the emperors Titus and Domitian, for 35 years, and then returned to his native city, where he wrote his Epigrams, a collection of short poems over 1500 in number, divided into 14 books, books xiii. and xiv. being entitled respectively Xenia and Apophoreta; these epigrams are distinguished for their wit, diction, and indecency, but are valuable for the light they shed on the manners of Rome at the period (43-104).

MARTIAL LAW, law administered by military force, to which civilians are amenable during an insurrection or riot.

MARTIN, the name of five Popes: M. I., St., Pope from 649 to 655; M. II., Pope from 882 to 884; M. III., Pope from 942 to 946; M. IV., Pope from 1281 to 1285; M. V., Pope from 1417 to 1431, distinguished for having condemned Huss to be burned.

MARTIN, AIME, a French writer, born in Lyons, repented to Paris, became the pupil and friend of Bernardin de St. Pierre; collected his works and married his widow; his letters to Sophia on "Natural History," &c., highly popular (1781-1844).

MARTIN, HENRI, celebrated French historian, born in Saint-Quentin; devoted his life to the study of the history of France; wrote an account of it, entitled "Histoire de France," a magnificent work in 19 volumes; brought the history down to 1789, and received from the Institute 20,000 francs as a prize (1810-1883).

MARTIN, JOHN, English painter, born near Hexham; was an artist of an ardent temperament and extraordinary imaginative power; his paintings, the first "Sadak in Search of the Waters of Oblivion," characterized as "sublime" and "gorgeous," were 16 in number, and made a great impression when produced; engravings of some of them are familiar, such as the "Fall of Babylon" and "Belshazzar's Feast" (1789-1854).

MARTIN, LADY. See FAUCIT, HELEN.

MARTIN, ST., bishop of Tours, was in early life a soldier, and meeting with a naked beggar one cold day in winter divided his military cloak in two, and gave him the half of it; was conspicuous both as a monk and bishop for his compassion on the poor; seated at a banquet on one occasion between the king and queen, hobbled with a poor beggar looking on, and extended his goblet of wine to him; he is the patron saint of toppers; d. 397. Festival, November 11.

MARTIN, SARAH, a philanthropist, born in Great Yarmouth; lived by dressmaking, and devoted much of her time to visiting criminals in the jails (1791-1843).

MARTIN, SIR THEODORE, man of letters, born in Edinburgh; acquired his first fame under the pseudonym of Bon Gaultier; is author of the "Life of the late Prince Consort"; with Aytoun wrote a "Book of Ballads," and translated the Odes of Horace, Dante's "Vita Nuova" and Goethe's "Faust" (1816-1900).

MARTINEAU, HARRIET, English authoress, born in Norwich; a lady with little or no genius, but with considerable intellectual ability, and not without an honest zeal for the "progress of the species"; she was an "advanced" thinker, and was a disciple of Auguste Comte; wrote a number of successful stories bearing on social questions, and had that courage of her opinions which commanded respect; it was she who persuaded Carlyle to try lecturing when his finances were low, and she had a real pride at the success of the scheme (1802-1876).

MARTINEAU, JAMES, rationalistic theologian, born in Norwich, brother of the preceding; began life as an engineer, took to theology, and became a Unitarian minister; was at first a follower of Bentham and then a disciple of Kant; at one time a materialist, he became a theist, and a most zealous advocate of theistic beliefs from the Unitarian standpoint; he was a thinker of great power, and did much both to elevate and liberate the philosophy of religion; his views were liberal as well as profound, and he was extensively known as the author of the "Endeavours after the Christian Life," "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," and "The Seat of Authority in Religion" (1805-1900).

MARTINIQUE, a West Indian French possession, one of the Lesser Antilles; has a much-indented, precipitous coast; a mountain range in the centre is densely wooded; the plains are fertile, and produce sugar, coffee, and cotton, which with fruit are the exports; the climate is hot and not salubrious; the island has been French, with three short intervals, since 1635; St. Pierre, the chief town, was destroyed in an eruption of the volcano Mont Pelée in 1902; the capital is Fort de France.

MARVELL, ANDREW, poet and politician, born in Yorkshire; was first a lyric poet, and in politics much of a Royalist, at last a violent politician on the Puritan side, having become connected with Milton and Cromwell; he wrote a tract "On the Growth of Popery and Arbitrary Government in England" after the Restoration, which brought him into trouble; being a favourite with the king, the king sought to bribe him, but in vain; he died suddenly, and an unfounded rumour was circulated that he had been poisoned (1621-1678).

MARX, HEINRICH KARL, a German Socialist, born in Trèves, of Jewish descent; was at first a student of philosophy and a disciple of Hegel, but soon abandoned philosophy for social economy on a democratic basis and in a materialistic interest; early adopted socialistic opinions, for his zeal in which he was driven from Germany, France, and finally Belgium, to settle in London, where he spent the last 30 years of his life; founded the "International" (q.v.), and wrote a work "Das Kapital," which has become the text-book of Socialism, a remarkable book and one that has materially promoted the cause it advocates (1818-1883).

MARY, THE VIRGIN. Of her we know nothing for certain except what is contained in the Gospel history, and that almost exclusively in her relation to her Son, in connection with Whom, and as His mother, she has become an object of worship in the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches.

MARY I, queen of England, was born in Greenwich, daughter of Henry VIII. and (Catherine of Aragon; at first the king's favourite, on her mother's divorce she was treated with aversion; during her brother Edward VI.'s reign she lived in retirement, clinging to her Catholic faith; on her accession in 1553 a Protestant plot to put Lady Jane Grey on the throne failed; she began cautiously to restore Catholicism, imprisoning Reformers and reinstating the old bishops; on her choosing Philip of Spain for her husband a revolt broke out under Sir Thomas Wyatt, and though easily put down was the occasion for the execution of Lady Jane Grey and the imprisonment of Elizabeth; after her marriage in 1554 the religious reaction gained strength, submission was made to Rome, and a persecution began in which 300 persons, including Latimer, Ridley, and Crammer, perished in three years; ill-health, Philip's cruelty, and her childlessness drove her to melancholy; a war with France led to the loss of Calais in 1558, and she died broken-hearted, a virtuous and pious, but bigoted and relentless woman (1516-1558).

MARY II, queen of England, daughter of the Duke of York (afterwards James II.) and Anne Hyde; was married to her cousin William of Orange in 1677; ascended the English throne with him on her father's abdication in 1688, and till her death was his much loved, good, and gentle queen; Greenwich Hospital for disabled sailors, which she built, is her memorial (1662-1694).

MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS, daughter of James V. of Scotland, and Mary of Guise, born in Linlithgow, became by her father's death queen ere she was a week old; her early childhood was spent on an island in the Lake of Menteith; she was sent to France in 1548, brought up at court with the royal princes, and married to the dauphin in 1558, who for a year, 1559-1560, was King Francis II.; on his death she had to leave France; she returned to assume the government in Scotland, now in the throes of the Reformation; refraining from interference with the Protestant movement she retained her own Catholic faith, but chose Protestant advisers; out of many proposed alliances she elected, against all advice, to be married to her cousin Darnley, 1565, and easily quelled the insurrection that broke out under Moray; Darnley, granted the title king, tried to force her to settle the succession in the event of her dying childless on him and his heirs; deeming her favourite Rizzio to stand in the way, he plotted with the Protestant Lords to have him murdered, and Mary was reduced to agree to his demands; the queen was for a time a prisoner in Holyrood, but she succeeded in detaching Darnley, and the latter's scheme fell through; her only son, afterwards James VI., was born three months later, in 1566; the murder of Darnley took place in February, 1567, being accomplished by Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, almost certainly with Mary's connivance; her marriage with Bothwell in May alienated the nobles; they rose, took the queen prisoner at Carberry, carried her to Edinburgh, then to Loch Leven, where they forced her to abdicate in July; next year, escaping, she fled to England, and was there for many years a prisoner; Catholic plots were formed to liberate her and put her in place of Elizabeth on the English throne (she was next in order of succession, being great-granddaughter of Henry VII.); at last she was accused of complicity in Babington's conspiracy, tried, found guilty, and executed in Fotheringhay Castle, February 8, 1587; faithful to her religion to the end, she was a woman of great beauty and charm, courage, and ability, warm affection and generous temper (1542-1587).

MARY, PRINCESS, third child and only daughter of King George V. and Queen Mary; she married in 1922 Viscount Lascelles, afterwards Earl of Harewood (1897-).

MARYLAND, a State of the U.S.A., occupying the basin of the Potomac and of Chesapeake Bay, with Pennsylvania on the N., Delaware on the E., and the Virginias on the W. and S.; has a much indented coast-line affording great facilities for navigation; the soil is throughout fertile; on the level coast plains tobacco and fruit, chiefly peaches, are grown; in the undulating central land wheat; the mountains in the W. are well wooded with pine; there are coal-mines in the W., copper and chrome in the midland, and extensive marble quarries; the shad and herring fisheries are valuable; the manufactures of clothing stuffs, flour, and tobacco are extensive; the climate of Maryland is temperate; the John Hopkins University is in Baltimore; there is a State college in every county, and schools for blind, deaf, and feeble-minded children; colonisation began in 1634, and a policy of religious toleration and peace with the Indians led to prosperity; the State was active in the War of Independence, and remained with the North in the Civil War; the capital is Annapolis, but the largest city is Baltimore, a great wheat-shipping port and centre of industry; Cumberland has brick and cement works, and Hagerstown has machine, farm implement, and furniture factories.

MASACCIU, or TOMMASO GUIDI, an Italian painter, born in Florence; went when very young to Rome, where he painted in the church of St. Clement a series of frescoes, his greatest work being the frescoes in the Brancacci chapel of the Carmine Church; he was a great master of perspective and colour (1401-1428).

MASALI, a warlike tribe in Africa, between the coast of Zanzibar and Victoria Nyanza, of the race of the Galla, men of powerful physique, though far from prepossessing in appearance; when their warlike spirit and prowess were spent they settled down to cattle-breeding; are now amenable to British rule.

MASANIELLO, a fisherman of Amalfi, who headed a revolt against the Spanish viceroy in Naples, which proved successful, but turned his head and led to his assassination (1623-1647).

MATTATHIAS, a Jewish priest, the father of the Maccabees, who in 170 B.C. when asked by a Syrian embassy to offer sacrifice to the Syrian gods, not only refused to do so, but slew with his own hand the Jew that stepped forward to do it for him, and then fell upon the embassy that required the act; upon which he rushed with his five sons into the wilderness of Judea and called upon all to follow him who had any regard for the Lord; this was the first step in the war of the Maccabees, the immediate issue of which was to the Jew the achievement of an independence which he had not enjoyed for 400 years.

MATTERHORN, a sharp Alpine peak, 14,780 ft., on the Swiss-Italian border, difficult of ascent; first scaled by Whymper 1865.

MATTHEW, a publican, by the Sea of Tiberias, who being called became a disciple and eventually an apostle of Christ; generally represented in Christian art as an old man with a large flowing beard, often occupied in writing his gospel, with an angel standing by.

MATTHEW, GOSPEL ACCORDING TO, written not later than 70 A.D., is the earliest record we possess of the ministry and teaching of Christ, and is believed to have been originally a mere collection of His sayings and parables; was written in Aramaic, the spoken language of the Jews at the period, of which the version we have in Greek is a translation, as some think by Matthew himself; its aim is to show that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah promised in the Old Testament, in a form, however, which led to His rejection by the Jews, and their consequent rejection by Him, to the proclamation of His gospel among the Gentiles (chap. xxviii. 19, 20).

MATTHIAS CORVINUS, conqueror and patron of learning, born in Klausenburg; was elected King of Hungary, 1458; though arbitrary in his measures, he promoted commerce, dispensed justice, fostered culture, and observed sound finance; he founded the University of Buda-Pesth, an observatory, and great library, but his reign was full of wars; for nine years he fought the Turks, and took from them Bosnia, Moldavia, and Wallachia; from 1470 till 1478 the struggle was with Bohemia, from which he wrested Moravia, Silesia, and Lusatia; then followed war with Frederick III., the capture of Vienna, 1485, and a large part of Austria, 1487; he made Vienna his capital, and died there (1443-1490).

MISSING ELEMENTS, those unknown elements which should fill the vacant spaces in the periodic table (q.v.).

MISSISSIPPI, an American State on the E. bank of the Lower Mississippi, abutting on the Gulf of Mexico, between Louisiana and Alabama; has a hilly surface, traversed by numerous rivers, the Yazoo, a tributary of the Mississippi, forming a great fertile delta; the climate is free from extremes; the chief industry is agriculture; the best crops are grown in the N., and on the alluvial bottom lands; in the centre and N.E. are good grazing farms; cotton, corn, oats, and fruits are the chief crops; virgin forests of hardwood cover much of the delta; valuable deposits of pipe and ochre clays and of lignite are found; cotton is manufactured, and there is trade in lumber; more than half the population is coloured, and the races are kept distinct in the State schools; the State university is at Oxford, and there are many other colleges; Jackson, the capital, is the chief railway centre, Meridian has iron manufactures, Vicksburg and Natchez are the chief river-ports; Mississippi was colonised by the French in 1699, ceded to Britain 1763, admitted to the Union 1817, joined the South in 1861, but was readmitted to the Union in 1869.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER, rises in Lake Itasca, Minnesota, and flowing S. for 2800 m., enters the Gulf of Mexico by a large delta; its earlier course is through picturesque country, often in gorges, with rapids such as the St. Anthony Falls, the Des Moines and Rock Island Rapids. After receiving the Missouri, over 2000 m. long, from the Rocky Mountains, it flows 24 m. per hour through great alluvial plains, which are protected from its overflows by hundreds of miles of earth embankments, and is joined by the Ohio from the N., the Red and Arkansas Rivers from the W., and many other navigable streams. The Mississippi is navigable by large steamers for 2000 m.; St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg, Natchez, and New Orleans are among the chief ports on its banks.

MISSISSIPPI SCHEME was started in France in 1717 by John Law and the Government, ostensibly to develop the Mississippi basin, but really to ease the pressure on the exchequer; a company was formed and empowered to monopolise almost all the foreign trade; 624,000 shares were issued; depreciated paper currency was accepted in payment, and the national bank issued notes without stint; in 1719 the demand for shares was enormous; the nation was completely carried away; next year the crash came, the Government made every effort to save the position, but in vain; the distress was extreme, and Law had to leave the country.

MISSOLOGHI, Greek seaport and fishing town, on the Gulf of Patras, chiefly noted for heroic defences in the War of Independence 1821-1826, and as the place of Byron's death 1824.

MISSOURI, an American State on the Mississippi, between Iowa and Arkansas, is half the size of the British Isles, and is traversed by the Missouri River; N. of that river the country is level, S. of it there rise the Ozark tablelands; the soil is very fertile, and the State principally agricultural; immense crops of maize, oats, potatoes, cotton, and tobacco are raised; there are large cattle ranches, and dressed beef and pork are largely exported; the climate is subject to extremes; coal, iron, lead, zinc, and other minerals abound, while marble, granite, and limestone are quarried; the rivers afford excellent transport facilities; the educational system is very complete; admitted to the Union in 1821, Missouri was divided in the Civil War, and suffered terribly, but since then has been very prosperous; the capital, St. Louis, is one of the greatest commercial and manufacturing towns in the Union, does a vast trade in grain and cotton, and has hardware, leather goods, and tobacco factories; Kansas City has great pork-backing establishments and railroad ironworks.

MISTRAL, FRÉDÉRIC, poet of Southern France, born near Millaune, was a peasant's son, and himself a peasant; his fame rose on the publication of the epic, "Mirlo," in Provençal dialect, 1859; in 1867 he published, "Calendou," in 1876 a volume of songs, and in 1884 "Nort," a novel (1880-1914).

MITFORD, MARY RUSSELL, authoress, born in Alford, Lincs, lived with her father, an extravagant physician, at Lyme Regis and London; she published poems in 1810-11-12, but, forced to earn a living, took to dramatic work; "Julian," "The Foscari," and "Rienzi" were successful if ephemeral tragedies; her best work was "Our Village," sketches of homely English life written with much care, which appeared first in the Lady's Magazine, and were published in 5 vols., 1824-1832 (1787-1855).

MITFORD, WILLIAM, English author; wrote a "History of Greece" and on the "English Metre, or the Harmony of Language" (1744-1827).

MITHRAS (i.e. the Friend), the highest of the second order of deities in the ancient Persian religion, the friend of man in this life and his protector against evil in the world to come, sided with Ormuzd against Ahriman, and represented as a youth kneeling on a bull and plunging a dagger into his neck, while he is at the same time attacked by a dog, a serpent, and a scorpion; identified with sun-worship in later times, and accepted as a war-god by the Romans.

MITHRIDATES THE GREAT, surnamed Eupator, King of Pontus from 123 to 63 a.c.; an implacable enemy of the Romans, between whom and him there raged from 90 to 63 a succession of wars, till he was defeated by Pompey near the Euphrates, when, being superseded by his son, he put an end to his life; he was a great man and conqueror, subdued many surrounding nations, and was a collector of works of art; he made a special study of poisons, and familiarised himself with all their antidotes, in view of possible attempts by means of them to take away his life.

N. of Pemba; was ceded with a tract of country six times the size of the British Isles, and rich in gold, copper, plumbago, and india-rubber, to the British East African Company by the Sultan of Zanzibar in 1888, since when it has been rebuilt, and the harbour, one of the best and healthiest on the coast, made a naval coaling-station and headquarters; it is a port of call for East and South African liners.

MOMMSEN, THEODOR, historian, born in Schleswig, a man of immense historical knowledge; his greatest work the "History of Rome"; was professor of Ancient History at Berlin; his forte was his learning rather than his critical capacity (1817-1903).

MONUS, the god of gallery, the son of Night, a kind of ancient Mephistopheles (q.v.).

MONACHISM, or MONASTICISM, is an institution in which individuals devote themselves, apart from others, to the cultivation of spiritual contemplation and religious duties, and which has constituted a marked feature in pre-Christian Jewish asceticism, and in Buddhism as well as in Christianity; in the Church it developed from the practice of living in solitude in the 2nd century, and received its distinctive note when the vow of obedience to a superior was added to the hermit's personal vows of poverty and chastity; the movement of St. Benedict in the 6th century stamped its permanent form on Western Monasticism, and that of St. Francis in the 12th gave it a more comprehensive range, entrusting the care of the poor, the sick, the ignorant, &c., to the hitherto self-centred monks and nuns; during the Middle Ages the monasteries were centres of learning, and their work in copying and preserving both sacred and secular literature has been invaluable; English Monachism was swept away at the Reformation; in France at the Revolution; and later in Spain, Portugal, and Italy it was suppressed; brotherhoods and sisterhoods have sprung up in the Protestant churches of Germany and England, but in all of them the vows taken are revocable.

MONACO, a small principality some 8 sq. m. in area, 9 m. E. of Nice, on the Mediterranean shore, surrounded by French territory and under French protection; has a mild, salubrious climate, and is a favourite winter resort. The capital, Monaco, is MONGOLS, a great Asiatic people having their original home on the plains E. of Lake Baikal, Siberia, who first rose into prominence under their ruler Genghis Khan in the 12th century; he, uniting the three branches of Mongols, commenced a career of conquest which made him master of all Central Asia; his sons divided his empire, and pursued his conquests; a Mongol emperor seized the throne of China in 1234, and from this branch sprang the great Kublai Khan, whose house ruled an immense territory, 1294-1368. Another section pushed westwards as far as Moravia and Hungary, taking Pesth in 1241, and founded the immense empire over which Tamerlane held sway. A third but later movement, springing from the ruins of these earlier empires, was that of Baber, who conquered India, and founded the Great Mogul line, 1519. Now Mongols are constituent elements in the populations of China, and Russian and Turkish Asia.

MONICA, ST., the mother of St. Augustine, who became to him the symbol of "the highest he knew on earth, bowing before a Higher in heaven."

MONISM, the name given to the principle of any system of philosophy which resolves the manifold of the universe into the evolution of some unity, in opposition to dualism (q.v.).

MONK, GEORGE, DUKE OF ALBEMARLE, general and admiral, was a Devonshire man, who spent his youth in the Dutch wars, and returned to England just in time to side with Charles I. against the Parliament; after leading a regiment in Ireland, he was captured at Nantwich in 1644, and spent two years in the Tower; obtaining his release by changing sides, he won commendation from Cromwell at Dunbar in 1650, and was entrusted with the command of operations in Scotland afterwards; in 1653 he beat Van Tromp at sea, twice; from 1654 till 1660 he was Governor of Scotland; on the death of Cromwell he saw the confusion, marched with 6000 troops to London, and after cautious negotiations brought Charles II. to England and set him on the throne, receiving a peerage and many honours for reward; he behaved well as Governor of London in the plague year, and was again admiral in the Dutch wars of 1666 (1608-1670).

MONMOUTH, GEOFFREY OF. See GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH.

MONMOUTH, JAMES, DUKE OF, illegitimate son of Charles II., born in Rotterdam; was admitted to Court after the Restoration, and received his title in 1668; his manners and his Protestantism brought him popular favour in spite of his morals, and by-and-by plots were formed to secure the succession for him; forced to fly to Holland in 1683, he waited till his father's death, then planned a rebellion with Argyll; Argyll failed in Scotland; Monmouth, landing in Dorsetshire, 1685, was soon overthrown at Sedgemoor, taken prisoner, and executed (1640-1685).

MONMOUTHSHIRE, a west of England county lying N. of the Severn estuary, between Glamorgan and Gloucestershire; is low and flat in the S., but otherwise hilly, and is traversed by the Ux River; more than half the surface is of permanent pasture; the wealth of Monmouthshire consists of coal and ironstone; Monmouth, the county town, is the centre of beautiful scenery, and has some fine buildings.

MONTÉZUMA II., the last of the Mexican emperors; submitted to Cortez when he landed; died in 1520 of a wound he received as he pleaded with his subjects to submit to the conqueror, aggravated by grief over the failure of his efforts to bring about a reconciliation.

MONTFORT, SIMON DE, son of a French count; came to England in 1230, where he inherited from his grandfather the earldom of Leicester; attached to Henry III., and married to the king's sister, he was sent to govern Gascony in 1248; returned in 1263, and passed over to the side of the barons, whom he ultimately led in the struggle against the king; after repeated unsuccessful attempts to make Henry observe the Provisions of Oxford, Simon took up arms against him in 1263; the war was indecisive, and appeal being made to the arbitration of Louis the Good, Simon, dissatisfied with his award, renewed hostilities, defeated the king at Lewes, and taking him and his son prisoner, governed England for a year (1264-1265); he sketched a constitution for the country, and summoned the most representative parliament that had yet met, but as he aimed at the welfare not of the barons only, but the common people as well, the barons began to distrust him; Prince Edward, having escaped from captivity, joined them, and overthrew Simon at Evesham, where he was slain (circ. 1260-1265).

MONTGOLFIER BROTHERS, inventors of the balloon, who made their first ascent in Paris in 1783 in "their paper dome, filled with smoke of burnt wood, amid the shouts of congregated men"; Joseph (1740-1810), and Étienne (1745-1799).

MONTGOMERIE, ALEXANDER, Scottish poet, born, it is believed, in Ayrshire, from a branch of the Eglinton family; wrote sonnets and some short poems, but his best-known piece is an allegorical poem, "The Cherry and the Slave" (circ. 1640-1695).

MONTGOMERY, COMTE DE, a French knight of Scottish descent, captain of the Scottish Guard under Henry II. of France; having in 1559 mortally wounded the king in a tourney, he fled to England, but returned to fight in the ranks of the Huguenots, and, having had to surrender, he was taken to Paris and beheaded, in violation of the terms of surrender, which assured him of his life (1530-1574).

MONTGOMERY, JAMES, poet and hymn-writer, born in Irvine, son of a Moravian minister; studied for the same profession, but was not licensed; after some years of various occupations he started journalism, and eventually produced a journal of his own, Sheffield Iris, 1794-1825; he was twice fined and imprisoned for seditious publications, but became a Conservative in 1832, a pensioner 1835, and died at Sheffield; of his poetry most is forgotten, but "For ever with the Lord" and some dozen other hymns are still remembered (1771-1854).

MONTGOMERY, ROBERT, author of "The Omnipresence of Deity" and "Satan," born in Bath, son of a clown; passed undistinguished through Oxford, and was minister of Percy Street Chapel, London; all his many works are forgotten save the above, which live in Macaulay's famous review (1807-1855).

MONTGOMERYSHIRE, a North Wales inland county, surrounded by Merioneth, Cardigan, Radnor, Salop, and Denbigh; is chiefly a stretch of mountain pasture land, which attains to 2500 ft. in Pinninam, and in which the Severn rises; but in the E. are well wooded and fertile valleys. There are lead and zinc mines and slate and limestone quarries. There is some flannel manufacture at Newtown. The county town is Montgomery.

MONTMORENCY, HENRI, SECOND DUC DE, born in Chantilly; distinguished himself in arms under Louis XIII., but, provoked along with Gaston, Duke of Orleans, into rebellion, he was taken prisoner and beheaded, notwithstanding intercessions from high quarters on his behalf for the zeal he had shown in defence of the Catholic faith (1595-1632).

MONTPELIER, capital of Vermont, 250 m. N. of New York and 120 m. N.W. of Portland, Maine, is on the Onion River, and has some mills and tanneries.

MONTPELLIER, capital of Hérault, France, on the Lex, 6 m. from the Gulf of Lyons, 80 m. SW. of Nîmes, is a picturesque town, containing a cathedral, a university, picture-gallery, libraries, and other institutions, and has been a centre of culture and learning since the 16th century; it also manufactures chemicals, corals, and textiles, and does a large trade in brandy and wine.

MONTREAL, the greatest commercial city of Canada, on an island in the St. Lawrence, at the confluence of the Ottawa River, 150 m. above Quebec; is the centre of railway communication with the whole Dominion and the States, connected by water with all the shipping ports on the great lakes, and does an enormous import and export trade; its principal shipment is grain; it is the chief banking centre, has the greatest universities (McGill and a branch of Laval), hospitals, and religious institutions, and has boot and shoe, clothing, and tobacco manufactures; more than half the population is French and Roman Catholic, and the education of Protestant and Roman Catholic children is kept distinct; founded in 1642 by the French on the site of the Indian town of Hochelaga, first visited by Cartier, Montreal passed to Britain in 1760; in 1776 it was occupied by the revolting American colonies, but recovered next year, and since then has had a steady career of prosperity and advancement.

MONTROSE, an ancient burgh and seaport of Forfarshire, 35 m. S. of Aberdeen, stands on a tongue of land between the sea and a basin which is almost dry at low water; carries on timber trade with Baltic and Canadian ports, and spins flax, makes ropes and canvas.

MONTROSE, JAMES GRAHAM, MARQUIS OF, born in Old Montrose, and educated at St. Andrews; travelled in Italy, France, and the Netherlands; returning in 1637, he joined the Covenanters, and we find him at Aberdeen, Stonehaven, and across the English border supporting the Covenant by force of arms; suspected of treachery to the cause, he was imprisoned for a year, 1641-1642, in Edinburgh Castle, whereupon he joined the side of the king; in 1644-1645 he did splendid services for Charles in Scotland, defeating the Covenanters near Aberdeen, at Inverlochry and Kilsyth; but routed by Leslie at Philiphaugh he lost the royal confidence, and next year withdrew to Norway; an unsuccessful invasion in the Stuart cause in 1650 ended in his defeat at Invercarron, capture, and execution. "The Great Marquis," as he is called, was a soldier of genius, and a man of taste, learning, clemency, and courage (1612-1650).

MONTSERRAT, was discovered by Columbus in 1493 and named by him after a mountain in Spain which he fancied it resembled. The English colonized it in 1632 and the French took it in 1664, to return it to England in 1668. In 1782 it capitulated to the French, and became British again in 1784. The area is 32 sq. m. The climate is healthy and the scenery beautiful; Montserrat is the Montpellier of the West Indies.

MONTYON PRIZES, four prizes in the gift of the French Academy, so named from their founder, Baron de Montyon (1733-1820), and awarded annually for (1) improvements in medicine and surgery; (2) improvements tending to health in some mechanical process; (3) acts of disinterested goodness; (4) literary works conducive to morality; the last two are usually divided among several recipients.

MOODY, DWIGHT LYMAN, evangelist, born in Massachusetts; settled in Chicago, where he began his career as an evangelist, associated with Ira D. Sankey; visited Great Britain in 1873 and 1889, and produced a widespread impression, especially on the first visit (1837-1890).

MOON, the satellite of the earth, from which it is distant 238,800 m., and which revolves round it in 27½ days, taking the same time to rotate on its own axis, so that it presents always the same side to us; is a dark body, and shines by reflection of the sun's light, its diameter 2165 m.; it has a rugged surface of mountains and valleys without verdure; has no water, no atmosphere, and consequently no life.

MOON, MOUNTAINS OF THE, a range of mountains supposed by Ptolemy and early geographers to stretch across Africa from Abyssinia to Guinea, now variously identified as the Kenia, Kilima-Njaro, Ruwenzori, &c.

MOONSHEE, in India a teacher of languages, especially Hindustani and Persian.

MOORE, GEORGE, Irish author. He was educated in London and Paris, and produced his first volume of verse at the age of 22; in 1885 came his first novel, "A Mummer's Wife," which was followed by others of realistic type. He did much to promote the revival of Irish literature at the beginning of this century (1853-).

MOORE, JOHN, M.D., author and novelist, born in Stirling, studied medicine in Glasgow, and practised there, in Holland, Paris, and London; he published books on the countries of Europe which he visited, an essay on the French Revolution, and among several novels one of some note, "Zeluco" (1789); he died at Richmond (1729-1802).

MOORE, SIR JOHN, general, eldest son of above, born in Glasgow; served in Corsica, the West Indies, Ireland, Holland, Egypt, Sicily, and Sweden; his famous and last expedition was to Spain in 1808, when with 10,000 men he was sent to co-operate in expelling the French; Spanish apathy and other causes weakened his hands, and in December he found himself with 25,000 men at Astorga, a French force of 70,000 advancing against him; retreat was necessary, but disastrous; he was overtaken by Soult at Coruña in the act of embark; the victory lay with the English, but Moore was killed (1761-1809).

MOORE, THOMAS, the Bard of Erin, born in Dublin, the son of a grocer, studied at Trinity College; went to London with a translation of "Anacreon," which gained him favour and a valuable appointment in the Bermudas in 1803; fought a duel with Jeffrey in 1806, began his "Irish Melodies" in 1807, and published "The Two Penny Poaching" in 1812; in 1817 appeared "Lalla Rookh," a collection of Oriental tales, and in 1818 a satire piece, "The Fudge Family," and he published "The Life of Byron in 1830; Moore's songs were written to Irish airs, and they contributed much to ensure Catholic emancipation (1779-1852).

MOORS, a general term for tribes in North Africa descended from Arab and Berber stock; they were Christians for several centuries, but on their conquest by Arabs in 647 embraced Mohammedanism; the town Moors do not endure before European settlers, but the nomad tribes show more vitality; Moorish peoples seized and settled in Spain early in the 8th century, and, introducing a civilisation further advanced than that in Europe generally with respect to science, art, and industry alike, maintained a strong rule till the 11th century; then the Spaniards gradually recovered the peninsula; Toledo was taken in 1085, Saragossa in 1118, Valencia in 1238, Seville in 1248, Murcia in 1290, and Granada in 1492; Turkish successes in the East came too late to save the Moors, and the last were banished from the country in 1609.

MORAINES, the debris deposited by a glacier, consisting of the fragments of rock which it has eroded; lateral moraines are those found at the edges of the glacier, terminal those deposited at the end, and medial those formed from the lateral moraines when two glaciers unite.

MORALITIES, didactic dramas, following in order of time the miracle plays and mysteries, in which the places of saints and Biblical personages in them were taken by characters representing different virtues and vices, and the story was of an allegorical nature; becoming popular about the end of the 14th century, they were the immediate precursors of the secular drama.

MORAVIA, a territory now in Czechoslovakia, lying between the Moravian and the Carpathian Mountains, with Silesia on the N., Hungary on the E., Lower Austria on the S., and Bohemia on the W.; is mountainous, with lofty plains in the S., and is watered by the March, a tributary of the Danube; the valleys and plains are fertile; grain, beetroot, flax, hemp, and vines are grown; cattle and poultry rearing and bee-keeping occupy the peasantry; sugar, textiles, and tobacco are the chief manufactures; there are coal and iron mines, graphite and meerschaum are found; the capital is Brunn, which has woollen and leather industries; associated with Bohemia in 1029, Moravia passed with that country to Austria in 1526, its association with Bohemia terminating in 1849; the inhabitants are two-thirds Slavs and one-third German, and are mostly Roman Catholic.

MORAVIANS, a sect of Protestant Christians who, followers of John Huss, formed themselves into a separate community in Bohemia in 1467 on the model of the primitive Church, in which the members regarded each other as brethren, and were hence called the United Brethren; like other heretics they suffered much persecution at the hands of the orthodox Church; they are known also as Herrnhuters.

MORAY, JAMES STUART, EARL OF, illegitimate son of James V. of Scotland, and so half-brother of Mary, Queen of Scots; was from 1556 the leader of the Reformation party, and on Mary's arrival in her kingdom in 1561 became her chief adviser; on her marriage with Darnley he made an unsuccessful attempt to raise a Protestant rebellion, and had to escape to England, 1565, and after a visit to Edinburgh, when he connived at Elzbio's murder, to France in 1567; he was almost immediately recalled by the nobles, who had imprisoned Mary in Lochleven, and appointed regent; next year he defeated at Langside the forces which, on her escape, had rallied round her, and in the subsequent management of the kingdom secured both civil and ecclesiastical peace, and earned the title of "the Good Regent"; he was shot by a partisan of the queen, James Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh, when riding through Linlithgow (1581-1570).

MORDANTS, substances used in the dyeing industry to make the dye cling to the fabric.

Born in Blackburn, Lancs., he took early to journalism in London, published a "Life of Burke" in 1867, and became editor of the Fortnightly Review the same year; later he edited the Morning Star and the Pall Mall Gazette. Among his other works were lives of Voltaire, Rousseau, Diderot, and Cobden, and the "English Men of Letters" series. As an editor he exerted considerable influence on politics; in 1883 he entered Parliament, became Secretary for Ireland, and was a member of all the Liberal Cabinets till 1914, when he retired. He was raised to the peerage in 1908 (1838-1923).

MORMON, BOOK OF, a book which in 1827 fell into the hands of Joseph Smith, the son of a farmer, alleged by him to have been written by a Hebrew prophet who emigrated to America 600 years before Christ, and to have been recorded by him as a direct revelation to himself from heaven, by means of which the interrupted communication between heaven and earth was to be restored.

MORMONISM, the creed of the Mormons, or Latter-day Saints, as they are called, who have settlements of their own in the valley of the Salt Lake, generally called Utah, U.S.; they conceive, according to Hepworth Dixon, of God as a flesh and blood man, of man as of the divine substance, as existing from, and to exist to, all eternity, and without inherited sin, of the earth as only one of many inhabited worlds, of the spirit world as consisting of beings awaiting incarnation, of polygamy as of divine ordination and the relationship eternal, and of their social system as the kingdom of God on earth.

MORNY, DUO DE, French politician, born in Paris; played a conspicuous part in the coup d'état of December, 1851, and was President of the Corps Législatif; was believed to have been the son of Queen Hortense, and consequently Louis Napoleon's half-brother (1811-1865).

MOROCCO, an empire under French and Spanish protection in the N.W. corner of Africa, three times the size of Great Britain, its coastline stretching from Algeria to Cape Nun, and its inland confines being vaguely determined by the French hinterlands. Two-thirds of the country is desert; much of the remainder is poor pasture land; the Atlas Mountains stretch from SW. to NE., but there are some expanses of level, fertile country; on the seaboard the climate is delightful, with abundance of rain in the season; among the mountains extremes prevail; south of the Atlas it is hot and almost rainless; the mineral wealth is probably great; gold, silver, copper, and iron are known to be plentiful, but bad government hinders development; the exports are maize, pulse, oil, wool, fruit, and cattle; cloth, tea, coffee, and hardware are imported; the chief industries are the making of leather, "Fes" caps, carpets, and the breeding of horses; government is extremely despotic and corrupt, and authority over many of the tribes is merely nominal; there is education; the religion is Mohammedanism, and slavery prevails; there are no roads, and the country is imperfectly known; telegraph, telephone, and postal service are in European hands; the country was taken from the Romans by the Arabs in the 7th century, and has ever since been in their hands, but Berbers, Spaniards, Moors, Jews, and negroes also go to make up the population. Throughout this century there has been constant friction between France and Spain and the tribes struggling for independence under various leaders, of whom Abd-el-Krim (q.v.) proved the most successful. The chief towns are Fes, in the N., a sacred Moslem city, squalid and dirty, but with good European trade, and a depot for the caravans from the interior; and Morocco, in the S., near the Tensift River, 240 m. SW. of Fes, well situated for local and transit trade, but a dilapidated city.

MOROCCO, a fine-grained leather of the skin of a goat or sheep, first prepared in Morocco.

MUSSELBURGH. See MIFLAKIN.

MUSSELBURGH, an old-fashioned Midlothian fishing town on the coast, 6 m. E. of Edinburgh, with golf links, and paper, nets, and tanning industries, and famous for Loretto school.

MUSSET, ALFRED DE, the premier poet of modern French literature, born in Paris of good parentage; wayward and impulsive in youth, he would settle to no occupation, till his already awakened taste for poetry, receiving a powerful stimulus through contact with Victor Hugo, led him to embrace the profession of letters; two volumes of poetry were published before he achieved, in 1833, his first signal success with the dramas "André del Sarto" and "Les Caprices de Marianne"; in the same year began his famous Idioten with George Sand (q.v.), involving him in the ill-fated expedition to Venice, whence he returned in the spring of 1834 shattered in health and disillusioned; from one unhappy love intrigue he passed to another, seeking in vain a solace for his restless spirit, but reaping an experience which enriched his writings; "Confessions d'un Enfant du Siècle" appeared in 1836, and is a significant confession of his life at this time; two years later he was appointed librarian at the Home Office, and in 1847 his charming comedy, "Un Caprice," was received with enthusiasm; in 1852 he was elected to the Academy, but his work was done, and already an ill-controlled indulgence in alcohol had fatally undermined his never robust strength; his writings, besides possessing the charm of an exquisite style, heightened by an undercurrent of true tenderness, are chiefly remarkable for the intense sincerity of feeling, albeit of a limited range, which animates them, and which finds its highest expression in his four great lyrical pieces, "Les Nuits"; his fine instinct for dramatic situation and gift of witty dialogue are manifest in the dramas already mentioned, as also in many others; of his prose works, "Le Fils du Titien," "Mademoiselle Minni Pinson" and the "Confessions" are his best; he was a handsome man, with fascinating manners (1810-1857).

MUSSOLINI, BENITO, Italian politician and Fascist dictator. Of humble origin, the son of a working man in Romagna province who was a militant Socialist, he worked with his hands, but also contrived to obtain education, studying in Italy and Switzerland. All this time he was a passionate adherent of his father's creed, and when quite a young man he was made editor of the principal Socialist organ, Avanti!. The Great War completely shattered his faith in internationalism. He resigned his editorship and his membership of the Socialist party, and founded his own daily paper, Popolo d'Italia. In 1915 he went to the front as a corporal, and returned wounded to continue the fight in his paper. The failure of the official Italian Socialists to repudiate the spreading poison of Bolshevism was really the origin of the whole Fascist movement, but Mussolini's new party was not strong enough to stem the tide until 1920, when the Bolsheviks seized works and factories and Fascists began to take a strong line. In 1922 the Fascist Association in Naples decided that the time had come to seize power, the march on Rome followed, and, the king siding with the marchers, Mussolini was installed as premier and dictator. Suppressing the liberty of the Press and Parliament, he nevertheless succeeded in restoring his country's finances and industrial power. Disputes with Greece and France, the seizure of Corfu (q.v.), and the signing of the Lateran Treaty (q.v.), were outstanding events of the following years, during which repeated attempts were made on Mussolini's life (1883-).

MUSTARD GAS, or dichloroethyl-sulphide, a poisonous gas used in the Great War; it is absorbed by the skin, causing painful inflammation, which is often fatal.

MUTATION, or sport, a slight variation in individuals of a species, which may ultimately give rise to a fresh species; the causes of mutations are obscure.

MUTSU HITO, Mikado of Japan, ascended the throne in 1867, married in 1869; had one son, Prince Yoshihito, who succeeded him, and three daughters; his reign was marked by great reforms, and especially the abolition of the feudal system which till then prevailed (1852-1912).

MYCENÆ, capital of Agamemnon's kingdom, in the N.E. of the Peloponnese, was in very ancient days a great city, but never recovered from the invasion of the people of Argos in 468 B.C.; excavations point to its civilisation being more akin to Phœnician than Greek.

MYCOLOGY, the branch of botany dealing with fungi.

MYOPIA, or shortsightedness, the inability to see distant objects distinctly owing to the eye being too long; this defect is rectified by the use of concave lenses.

MYRMIDONS, "ant-men," so-called because Zeus was said to have peopled Thessaly, from which originally they came, by transforming ants into men; they were the people of Akina, whose warriors followed Achilles to the siege of Troy.

MYSORE, a native State, half the size of England, embedded in the Madras Presidency, occupies a lofty, broken, but fertile tableland; the upper waters of the Kistna and Kaveri are used for irrigation purposes; betel-nut, coffee, cotton, rice, and silk are exported; cloth, wheat, and precious metals are imported; the climate is healthy and pleasant; under British government from 1831, it was restored to its prince in 1881, under British protection; the capital is Mysore, a prosperous, well-built town.

MYSTAGOGUE, in Greece, was the priest who instructed candidates and prepared them for initiation into the various religious mysteries; in the Christian Church it denoted the catechist who prepared catechumens previous to their admission to the sacraments.

MYSTERIES, sacred rites and ceremonies of stated observance among the Greeks and Romans in connection with the worship of particular divinities, to which only the initiated were admitted, and in which, by associating together, they quickened and confirmed each other in their faith and hope, and in which it would seem they made solemn avowal of these; the name is also applied to the miracle plays (q.v.) of the Middle Ages.

MYSTICISM, a state of mind and feeling induced by direct communion with the unseen, and by indulging in which the subject of it estranges himself more and more from those who live wholly in the outside world, so that he cannot communicate with them and they cannot understand him.

NABOB

NABOB. See NAWAB.

NABOTH, a Jew, who was stoned by order of Ahab, king of Israel, because he refused to sell him his vineyard, an outrage for which Ahab was visited by Divine Judgment; is symbol, in the regard of the Jews, of the punishment sure to overtake all rich oppressors of the poor.

NACHTIGAL, GUSTAV, German traveller and explorer; visited the heart of Africa (1869-1874), the first European to do so, at the instance of Fruehauf by way of Tripoli, returning by way of Cairo, and wrote an account of his journey, "Sahara and Sudan"; in 1884 annexed to Germany territory in West Africa; died on his return voyage, and was buried at Cape Palmas (1834-1885).

NADIR, name given to the part of the heavens directly under our feet, as zenith to that directly over our head.

NADIR SHAH, king of Persia, born in Khorassan of low origin; began his career as a brigand; set himself at the head of 3000 brigands to deliver Persia from the yoke of the Afghans, and expelled them, rising by degrees to the sovereignty of Persia, made war on the Afghans, invaded Hindustan, and took and plundered Delhi, restoring its former dominion to the Persian monarchy; became subject to suspicion of plots against him, had recourse to violence, and was assassinated (1688-1747).

NAEVIUS, GNEIUS, one of the earliest Roman poets, born in Campania; wrote dramas, and an epic poem on the first Punic War, in which he had served; satirised the aristocracy, and was obliged to leave Rome, where he had spent thirty years of his life; died at Utica (265-204 B.C.).

NAGARI, the name given to the characters in Sanskrit and Hindi alphabets.

NAGAS, in the Hindu mythology "deified serpents," sons of Kadru, a personification of darkness; are represented as more or less invested with a human form, and endowed with knowledge, strength, and beauty; live in the depths of the ocean, and their capital city exposes to the vision a display of the most dazzling riches. They are not always represented as harmful; though armed with poison they possess the elixir of strength and immortality, and form the supports of the universe. They are a reflection of the belief that the deadly powers as well as the regenerative centre in one and the same deity, in his wisdom killing that he may make alive. Also the name of a race of aborigines in North-East India.

NAGASAKI, one of the six treaty ports of Japan, on the NW. of the island Kiushiu; has a beautiful and extensive harbour, within which lies the island of Deshima; manufactures "egg-shell" china, exports coal, tea, &c., and possesses an excellent dockyard; American and English missions are carried on.

NAGPUR, or NAGPORE, capital of the Central Provinces of British India, and of a district and division of the same name; an important railway terminus, 450 m. NE. of Bombay; is noted for the manufacture of fine cloth, and carries on a brisk trade in wheat, salt, spices, &c.

NAHUM, one of the minor prophets of the Old Testament; appears to have been a contemporary of Isaiah, and to have prophesied after the destruction of Samaria and the defeat of Sennacherib before Jerusalem in the reign of Hezekiah. His mission as a prophet was to console the people in the presence of the formidable power of Assyria, and to predict its downfall, and especially that of its capital city Nineveh, which was destroyed by the Medes and Babylonians in 606 B.C. His thought is forcible, his expression clear, and his diction pure, all three worthy of the classical age of Hebrew literature.

NAIADS, nymphs of the fresh-water fountains and streams, and as such endowed with prophetic power, and associated with other deities in the sphere of nature gifted with the same power; are represented as lovely maidens in a nude or semi-nude state.

NAIRNE, BARONESS, Scottish poetess, born in Gaik, Perthshire, third daughter of Laurence Oliphant of that ilk, of Jacobite proclivities; known for her beauty as the Flower of Strathern; was married to the sixth Lord Nairne, whom she survived; wrote 78 songs, the most famous among them being "The Land o' the Leal," "The Laird o' Cockpen," "Bonnie Charlie's noo awa," "Callor Herrin," and "The Auld House"; died at Gaik (1766-1845).

NAIRNSHIRE, a northern county of Scotland, fronts the Moray Firth, wedged in between Elgin on the N. and Inverness on the W. and S.; the surface rugged and mountainous in the S. and E., slopes towards the Firth, and is traversed by the rivers Nairn and Findhorn; Loch Loy is the largest of several small lochs; scarcely one-fifth of the soil is devoted to the raising of cereals, but more attention is given to stock-raising; Cawdor and Auldearn are places of local historic and antiquarian interest.

NAIROBI, the capital of Kenya Colony, British East Africa; an important station on the Uganda railway.

NAIRS, Hindus of high caste, claiming to rank next the Brahmans, who lived on the Malabar coast of India; among them polyandry prevailed, and the royal power descended through the female line.

NAMAQUAS, a warlike but pastoral people of South Africa; one of the principal branches of the Hottentot race, and inhabiting Great Namaqualand.

NAMUR, capital of a province of the same name in Belgium, is situated at the junction of the Meuse and the Sambre, 35 m. SE. of Brussels. The town is strongly fortified, but only a few of its fine old buildings have escaped the ravages of war. It fell to the Germans in August, 1914, after a six-day siege, part of the town being burnt and a number of civilians murdered. The citadel, the cathedral, and the Jesuit church of St. Loup still stand. Cutlery, fire-arms, &c., are manufactured. The province skirts the N.E. border of France between Hainaut and Luxembourg.

NANA SAHIB, a Hindu traitor, his real name Dundhu Panth, of Brahman descent, adopted son of the ex-Peshwa of the Marhattas, whose pension from the British Government was not continued to Nana on his death, which rendered the latter the deadly foe to British rule in India, and the instigator, on the outbreak of the Mutiny in 1856, of the massacre of Cawnpore; he had on the outbreak of the Mutiny in question offered his services to a British general, but placed himself at the head of the mutineers; the miscreant escaped to Nepal, and his fate was never known; b. 1820. See CAWNPORE.

NANCY, capital of the department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, North-East France, is prettily situated amid woodland scenery on the river Meurthe, 220 m. E. of Paris; the new town is spaciouly laid out, while the old town, narrowed in its streets, has many interesting old buildings, e.g. the cathedral and 16th-century palace; there is a university, and an active trade in embroidered cambric and muslin, besides cotton and woollen goods, &c. It was the scene of a French victory over the Germans in August, 1914.

NANKING, an ancient city, and up to the 16th century the capital of China, is situated on the Yangtze River, 130 m. from its mouth; between 1853 and 1864 its finest buildings were destroyed by the Taiping rebels; its manufactures of nankeen and satin and of its once famous pottery and artificial flowers have fallen off, but it still continues to be the chief seat of letters and learning in China.

NANNA, in the Norse mythology the wife of Balder, the sun-god; distinguished for her conjugal fidelity, threw herself on the funeral pyre of her husband, and descended to the shades with him; when the pair were entreated to return, he sent his ring to Odin and she her thimble to Frigg.

NANSEN, FRIDTJOF, Norwegian explorer. Educated at Christiania University, his first voyage was to Greenland in 1882; he tried in 1895 in the Fram to reach the North Pole, but succeeded only in reaching what was then the record of 88° N.; he then took to politics, supporting the separation of Norway from Sweden; was Norwegian Ambassador in London in 1905, and in 1921 superintended the relief of Russians during the famine (1891-1930).

NANTES, capital of the department of Loire-Inférieure, North-West France, on the Loire, 35 m. from the sea; its fine streets, handsome buildings, and historical associations make it one of the most interesting cities in France; the cathedral and the ducal castle date from the 16th century; ship-building, sugar-refining, and hardware are the staple industries, while an active shipping trade is kept up with the colonies.

NANTES, EDICT OF, edict granted by Henry IV., 1598, allowing to Protestants religious liberty and political enfranchisement, and confirmed by Louis XIII. in 1614, but revoked, after frequent infringements, in the shape of dragonnades and otherwise, by Louis XIV., Oct. 23, 1685, at the instance of Madame de Maintenon and Père la Chaise.

NAPHTHA, a mixture of liquid hydrocarbons of an inflammable nature, found in petroleum.

NAPHTHALENE, a white, crystalline solid hydrocarbon present in the "middle oil" obtained by the distillation of coal tar; its derivatives are of great importance in the dye industry.

NAPIER, SIR CHARLES, the conqueror of Sind, born in Westminster, descendant of Napier of Merchiston; entered the army, was present at Coruña, served in the Peninsular War, in 1841 made commander-in-chief of the Bombay army, defeated the Sikhs at Meeanee in 1843 in a brilliant engagement; became governor of Sind, returned to England, and was welcomed with enthusiasm; went to India again on the outbreak of a second Sikh War, to find it suppressed; quarrelled with the Governor-General and came home; was a brave, upright, and humane man, and a great favourite with the army (1782-1853).

NAPIER, SIR CHARLES, admiral, cousin of preceding, born near Falkirk; entered the navy as a volunteer in 1799, assisted in two naval engagements, and for a time served as a volunteer in the Peninsular army; joined the Portuguese navy, defeated the fleet of Dom Miguel, tried to reform the navy of Portugal, but failed, assisted by land and sea in driving Mehmet Ali out of Syria, and held the command of the Baltic fleet during the Crimean War, but disappointed expectations and was deprived of command (1786-1860).

NAPIER, JOHN, lord of Merchiston, mathematician, born in Merchiston Castle, near Edinburgh; famed over the world as the inventor of logarithms; wrote a book on the Apocalypse, which contains some plain-spoken counsel to King James; believed in astrology, and was addicted to divination as well as mechanical invention (1650-1817).

NAPIER, SIR WILLIAM, brother of the conqueror of Sind; entered the army at the age of 15, served all through the Peninsular War, and wrote, besides the "Conquest of Sind," the "History of the Peninsular War," a celebrated work, written from intimate knowledge of the events and with matchless graphic power (1786-1860).

NAPIER OF MAGDALA, LORD, military engineer officer, born in Ceylon; distinguished himself at the sieges of Multan, Delhi, and Lucknow; commanded an expedition in Abyssinia, stormed and took Magdala in 1868, for which he was rewarded with high honours; was commander-in-chief in India, 1870-1876; made field-marshal, 1883 (1810-1890).

NAPLES, the largest and richest city of Italy; has a lovely situation within the bend of Naples Bay, spreading from the foreshore back upon wooded hills and rising terraces, behind which lie the snow-clad Apennines; to the E. lies the old town with its historic Via di Roma and narrow crowded thoroughfares; the newer portion on the W. is more spaciouly laid out, and much has been done in recent years to improve the sanitation and water supply; the national museum, rich in Pompeii relics, the university, the national library, the archiepiscopal cathedral, and the four medieval gateways are the chief architectural features; large quantities of wine, olive-oil, chemicals, perfumery, &c., are exported, while woollen, silk, linen, glove, and other factories carry on a good home trade; Naples became incorporated in the kingdom of Italy in 1861 after the Bourbon dynasty had been swept away by Garibaldi.

NAPOLEON I., emperor of the French, born in Ajaccio, Corsica, the second son of Charles Bonaparte and Letitia Ramolino; trained at the military schools of Brienne and Paris; distinguished first as a captain of artillery at the siege of Toulon in 1793; elected general of brigade in the Italian campaign of 1794; he fell under suspicion, but was soon after invested with the supreme command of the army there and the conduct of the war, which was rendered memorable by the victories of Montenotte, Lodi, Rivoli, Arolo, &c.; on his return to Paris he was received with an enthusiasm which excited in him the ambition to render himself indispensable to the country; to utilize his services in their own interest the Directory determined to strike a blow at England, and Egypt being the point of attack selected he sailed in command of an expedition for that destination in 1797, and conducted it with successes and reverses till, in 1799, the unpopularity and threatened fall of the Directory called him back; it was the occasion for a coup d'état which he had meditated, and which he accomplished on the henceforward celebrated 18th Brumaire (Nov. 9, 1799), when a consulship of three was established, himself first Consul, and eventually in 1802 Consul for life; his administration in this capacity, while discredited by several despotic acts, was in the main instrumental for the public benefit and distinguished by its regard for the interest of law and good order, but his personal ambition the while was not asleep, for, by a Concordat with the Pope, he so attached the Catholic Church to the State as to secure the clerical support to his ambitious projects, and was able on May 18, 1804, to set himself invested with the Imperial dignity, only Carnot in the Tribunal and Regreire in the Senate protesting against the step as a violation of liberty; Napoleon owed it to his victories in the field that he attained this elevation, and held that the sword must maintain what the sword had won; from this date accordingly began that long array of wars against the rest of Europe, distinguished by the victories of Austerlitz, Jena, Eylau, Friedland, Eckmühl, and Wagram, which contributed to inspire all the nations around with a sense of the terror of his name; but with the unfortunate expedition into Russia, in 1812, Napoleon's glory began to wane and the tide to turn; after the battles of Lützen and Bautzen, he might perhaps have signed an honourable peace, but he declined the terms offered, and was defeated at Leipzig (Oct. 1813) by the Allies, who invaded France and entered Paris in spite of all his efforts to keep them at bay, upon which he was compelled to abdicate at Fontainebleau and retire to Elba, April 20, 1814; it was in vain for him to return from his retreat and re-enter Paris on March 20 following, for the Powers, with England and Prussia at their head, leagued against him and crushed him at Waterloo; by this defeat he had forfeited the throne, and was compelled to abdicate, but, unable to escape from France, he delivered himself up to Captain Maitland of the Bellerophon, and was shipped off to St. Helena, where, after some six years of misery, he died, May 5, 1821; his body was disinterred and buried with great pomp under the dome of the Hôtel des Invalides, December 15, 1840 (1769-1821).

NAPOLEON, LOUIS. See LOUIS NAPOLEON, also BONAPARTE.

NEAL, JOHN MASON, hymnologist, born in London; was a zealous and advanced High Churchman, wrote a "History of the Holy Eastern Church"; is best known for his hymns, translated and original (1818-1866).

NEANDER, JOHANN AUGUST WILHELM, Church historian, born in Göttingen, of Jewish parents, his father's name Mendel, which he changed into Neander (new man) on his baptism at the age of 17; studied theology under Schleiermacher at Halle, commenced his work as a teacher of theology in Heidelberg in 1811, but was two years after called to the chair of Church History in Berlin, a post he occupied with signal distinction till his death, his fame all along attracting to him students from every quarter of Christendom; besides several monographs, he wrote the history of the Church from its first starting through its after expansion, and a "Life of Christ" in answer to Strauss, which for its apprehension of the spirit of Christ and His teaching has never been surpassed (1789-1850).

NEANDERTHAL MAN, an early sub-man remains of which were first found in the Neanderthal near Düsseldorf, in 1856, and subsequently in many other parts of Europe; these men lived towards the end of the Lower Palæolithic period and their remains belong to the culture known as Mousterian; the species, which appears to have become extinct at the end of the last ice age, although human in some respects is definitely anthropoid in others; Neanderthal man represents an extremely low type of man-like being in Europe, corresponding to similar remains discovered in Belgium, Germany, and elsewhere.

NEATH, a borough and river port of Glamorganshire, on the navigable Neath, 6 m. N.E. of Swansea; is an old town, and has interesting ruins of an abbey and of a castle (burned 1231); has prosperous copper, tin, iron, and chemical works.

NEBILIM, the prophets of Israel as an organised class, who first figure as guardians of the spiritual interests of the nation to the time of Samuel, when it was threatened with extinction piecemeal at the hands of the Philistines, and whose mission it was to recall the divided tribes to a sense of their unity as the chosen of Jehovah, and to see that they were welded into one under a single king; they lived together in communities, appeared in companies, wore a distinctive dress, and were called the sons of the prophets; while they were performing and discharging their offices they were true to their calling, but when order was established they, as is usual in such cases, became more and more lax, until first Elisha, and then another and another who were for more part not of the order, had to remind the nation of what its authorised teachers, in their unfaithfulness, were failing to do, and in consequence suffering God's cause to go to wreck.

NEBO, an Assyrian deity, associated with moon-worship, and a god of the arts and sciences; the name appears in that of several Babylonian monarchs, as in Nebuchadnezzar.

NEBRASKA, one of the west central States of the U.S.A., has Dakota on its N. and Kansas and Colorado on the S., is 14 times the size of England; in the E. stretches of fertile land yield abundant crops of grain (maize chiefly), hemp, flax, sugar-beet, and tobacco, while in the W. rich prairie pastures favour a prosperous stock-raising; the Platte, Niobrara, and Republican Rivers follow the eastward slope of the land; Omaha and Lincoln (capital) are the chief centres of the manufacturing industries; climate is dry and bracing; wolves, foxes, skunks, &c., abound, chiefly in the "Bad Lands" of the N.; Nebraska was incorporated in the Union in 1867.

NEBULÆ can be divided into dark nebulae, or great clouds which obscure part of the Milky Way, appearing as voids in the heavens; diffuse luminous nebulae, like the great nebula in Orion, are clouds of fine dust or rare gas, owing most of their luminosity to neighbouring stars; planetary nebulae, like the ring nebula in Lyra, have in most cases a central bright star, and are probably now in a late stage of development; spiral nebulae, like that in Andromeda, are considered to be "island universes" outside our system; the first three classes are confined to the neighbourhood of the Milky Way.

NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS, a theory of the origin of the solar system published by Laplace in 1796; he imagined that the system started as a hot gaseous nebula which cooled and contracted, leaving rings of material which condensed to form the various planets; the theory was first criticised by Babinet in 1861 and has now been discarded as untenable.

NECKER, JACQUES, celebrated financier, born in Geneva; married the accomplished Susanne Curchod, the rejected of Gibbon, and became by her the father of Mme. de Staël; was a man of high repute for probity and business capacity; became in 1777 Director-General of Finance in France, tried hard and honestly, by borrowing and retrenchment, to restore the fallen public credit, but after five years was dismissed; was recalled in 1788, but though the funds rose, and he contributed to their relief two million livres of his own money, was again dismissed, to be once more recalled, only to expose his inability to cope with the crisis and to be forced to retire (1782-1804).

NECTAR, in the regard of the Greeks the drink of the gods, which, with ambrosia, their food, nourished the labor, their blood, and kept them ever in the bloom of immortal youth; it was not permitted to mortals to drink of it.

NEMESIS, in the Greek imagination, the executioner of divine vengeance on evil-doers, conceived of as incarnated in the fear which precedes and the remorse which accompanies a guilty action.

NENNIUS, the reputed author of a chronicle of early British history, who appears to have lived not later perhaps than the 9th century; his "Historia" was written in Latin and it contained legends of King Arthur and his knights, from which later authors borrowed their material.

NEOLITHIC or NEW STONE AGE, the latter part of the stone age, distinguished from the palæolithic age by the grinding and polishing of the stone tools used, and the more elaborate axe-heads and hammer-stones; it was followed by the bronze age.

NEOLOGY, the name given to the rationalist theology of Germany or the rationalisation of the Christian religion.

NEON, one of the inert gases present in small quantities in the atmosphere; was discovered by Sir William Ramsay in 1898.

NEO-PLATONISM, a system of philosophy that originated in Alexandria at the beginning of the 3rd century, which resolved the absolute, or God, into the incarnation thereof in the Logos, or reason of man, and which aimed at "demonstrating the graduated transition from the absolute object to the personality of man"; it was a concretion of European and Oriental thought.

NEPAL, a native State in North India, occupying a narrow, mountainous territory along and including the southern slopes of the Himalayas, which separates it from Tibet; consists mainly of valleys and intervening mountain ridges, among which dwell various hill tribes, the dominant race being the hardy Gorkhas (q.v.).

NEPENTHE, an imaginary goddess, the allayer of pain and the soother of sorrows, or the impersonation of stern retributive justice.

NEPOS, CORNELIUS, Roman historian, born in Pavia; was a contemporary and friend of Cicero; was the author of several historical works, no longer extant, and the one still extant ascribed to him, entitled "De Viris Illustribus," is believed to be an abridgment of an earlier work by him.

NEPTUNE, the chief marine deity of the Romans, and identified with the Poseidon of the Greeks; is represented with a trident in his hand as his sceptre.

NEPTUNE, the remotest planet of the solar system; revolves round the sun at a mean distance of 2,800 million miles in a period of 166 years; its period of rotation on its axis is uncertain, but is believed to be about 8 hours; its diameter is four times and its mass fifteen times that of the earth; discovered by Adams and Leverrier in 1846, after calculations based on the irregularities of the orbit of Uranus; it has one satellite.

NERBUDDA, or NARBADA, a sacred river of India; has its source in the Amarkantak plateau of the Deccan, and flows westward, a rapid flow of greenish-blue water, through the great valley between the Vindhya and Satpura Mountains, reaching the Gulf of Cambay after a course of 800 m., the last 30 of which are navigable.

NEREIDS, nymphs in the Mediterranean Sea, daughters of Nereus, 50 in number, and attendant on Poseidon.

NEREUS, the god of the Mediterranean Sea, the son of Pontus and Gaia, the husband of Doris, and father of the Nereids, represented as a sage, venerable old man.

NERI, ST. PHILIPPO DI, Italian priest, born in Florence, of noble family; founder of the Congregation of the Oratory; was known from his boyhood as the Good Pippo, and spent his life in acts of devotion and charity (1515-1595). Festival, May 26.

NERNST, WALTER, German chemist, professor in Göttingen and Berlin; his most important work was in the realm of physical chemistry; inventor of the incandescent lamp named after him (1864-).

NERO, Roman emperor from A.D. 54 to 68, born in Antium, son of Cn. Domitius Ahenobarbus and of Agrippina, daughter of Germanicus; after the murder of Claudius, instigated by Agrippina, who 4 years previously had become the emperor's wife, Nero seized the throne, excluding Britannicus, the rightful heir; during the first 5 years of his reign his old tutors, Seneca and Burrus, were his advisers in a wise and temperate policy, but gradually his innate tendency to vice broke through all restraint, and hurried him into a course of profligacy and crime; Britannicus was put to death, his mother and wife, Octavia, were subsequent victims, and in 64 numbers of Christians suffered death, with every refinement of torture, on a trumped-up charge of having caused the great burning of Rome, suspicion of which rested on Nero himself; a year later Seneca and the poet Lucan were executed as conspirators, while he killed his second wife Poppaea in a frenzy; these and many other similar crimes brought on inevitable rebellion; Spain and Gaul declared in favour of Galba; the Praetorian Guards followed suit; Nero fled from Rome, and sought refuge in suicide (37-68).

NERVA, Roman emperor from 96 to 98, elected by the Senate; ruled with moderation and justice; resigned in favour of Trajan, as from age unable to cope with the turbulence of the Praetorian Guards.

NESS, LOCH, the second largest loch in Scotland, stretches along the valley of Glenmore, in Inverness-shire, is 22½ m. long, and has an average breadth of 1 m. and an extreme depth of 280 ft.; its main feeders are the Morriston, Oich, and Foyers; the Ness is its chief outlet.

NESELEBRODE, COUNT VON, celebrated Russian diplomatist, born in Lisbon, where his father was Russian ambassador; represented Russia at a succession of congresses, played a prominent part at them, and directed the foreign policy of the empire under Alexander I. and Nicholas I., from 1816 to 1856, though he strove to avoid the war with Turkey which broke out in 1853 (1780-1862).

NESSUS, a Centaur who, for attempting to carry off Dejanira, Hercules' wife, was shot by Hercules with an arrow dipped in the blood of the Hydra (q.v.), and who in dying handed to Dejanira his mantle, dipped in his poisoned blood, as a charm to regain her husband's affections should he at any time prove unfaithful. See HERCULES.

NESSUS' SHIRT, the poisoned robe which Nessus gave Dejanira, and which in a moment of distrust she gave to Hercules. See NESSUS.

NESTOR, king of Pylos, a protégé and worshipper of Poseidon, the oldest, most experienced, and wisest of the Greek heroes at the siege of Troy.

NESTORIUS, a celebrated heresiarch, born in Syria; was made patriarch of Constantinople in 428, deposed for heresy by the Council of Ephesus, 431, and banished to the Libyan Desert, where he died; the heresy he taught, called after him Nestorianism, was that the two natures, the divine and the human, coexist in Christ, but are not united, and he would not allow to the Virgin Mary the title that had been given her as the "Mother of God"; the orthodoxy of the Church as against the doctrine was championed by Cyril of Alexandria.

NETHERLANDS, a term formerly applied to the whole NW. corner of Europe, occupied by Belgium (q.v.) and Holland, but now an official designation only of Holland (q.v.).

NETLEY, the site of the handsome Royal Victoria Hospital, on the shore of Southampton Water, 3 m. SE. of Southampton, and connected by railway line with Portsmouth; founded in 1863 as an asylum for invalided soldiers, also the headquarters of the female nurses of the army; in the vicinity also are interesting remains of a Cistercian abbey.

NETTLERASH, or urticaria, an irritating eruption in the skin causing a sensation like the stinging of nettles. It may be acute or chronic, frequently caused by errors of diet.

NEUCHÂTEL, a western canton of Switzerland, lying between Lake Neuchâtel and France; the surface is diversified by the Jura Mountains, and plentifully supplied with small streams; the greater part of the inhabitants are French Protestants; coal and iron are found, stock-raising and agriculture are engaged in, but the great specialty of the canton is watchmaking, which is chiefly carried on at Le Chaux-de-Fonds and Le Locle; Neuchâtel was incorporated in the Swiss Confederation in 1815. Neuchâtel, capital of the canton, has a fine situation on the NW. shore of the lake, 86 m. NE. of Geneva; has many educational, art, and charitable institutions, and is chiefly engaged in the manufacture of watches, jewellery, &c. Lake of Neuchâtel is a beautiful sheet of water, 25 m. in length, and from 3 to 6 in breadth.

NEUSTRIA, western portion of the kingdom of the Franks in the time of the Merovingian and Carolingian dynasties, and in constant rivalry with Austrasia (q.v.), the kingdom of the East; it extended from the Scheldt to the Loire and Solons; Paris, Orleans, and Tours were the chief towns.

NEUTRODYNE, a special type of circuit used in a wireless receiving set, designed to prevent oscillation.

NEUVE CHAPELLE, village in the department of Nord, France. The advancing German army occupied it in Oct., 1914, and it was the scene of an important battle in March, 1915, when British troops captured the village with heavy casualties.

NEUVILLE, ALPHONSE DE, French painter of battle-scenes, born in St. Omer; he was an illustrator of books, among others Guizot's "Histoire de France" (1836-1835).

NEVA, a river of Russia issuing from the SW. corner of Lake Ladoga, flows westward in a broad, rapid current past Leningrad, and discharges its great volume of water into the Bay of Cronstadt, in the Gulf of Finland, after a winding course of 40 miles.

NEVADA, one of the western States of the U.S.A., occupying a wide stretch of territory on the Great Plateau or Basin, between the Rocky Mountains on the E. and the Cascades and the Sierra Nevada on the W., has Oregon and Idaho on the N., and California on the S. and W.; elevated, cold, dry, and barren, it offers little inducement to settlers, and is in consequence the least in population of the American States; the great silver discoveries of 1859 brought it first into notice, and mining still remains the chief industry; Virginia City and Carson (capital) are the chief towns; was admitted to the Union in 1864.

NEVILLE'S CROSS, BATTLE OF, battle fought near Durham between the Scots and English in 1346, in which the former were defeated and King David II. taken prisoner.

NEVINSON, CHRISTOPHER RICHARD WYNNE, British artist. He studied in London and Paris and first exhibited in 1910; he came to the fore as an official artist of the Great War, in which he served in the army for two years; his work shows Cubist and Futuristic influences and is designed to show man as a cog in a machine (1889-).

NEVIS, an island in the Leeward group (q.v.), with capital Charlestown; colonised in 1628; exports sugar, oranges, and limes.

NEVIS, BEN. See BEN NEVIS.

NEW BRITAIN, a large island controlled by Australia, in the Archipelago of that name, West Pacific, lying off the N.E. coast of New Guinea, from which it is separated by Dampier Strait; is 300 m. long, with an average breadth of 40 m.; is mountainous and volcanic in the interior, and thickly clad with forest trees; fruits of various kinds are the chief product; is inhabited by savages; for a time under German control, it was known as Neu-Pommern.

NEW BRUNSWICK, a S.E. province of Canada, presents a long fore-shore to the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the N.E. and to the Bay of Fundy on the S.E., while directly E. lies Nova Scotia, to which it is joined by the Isthmus of Chignecto; the surface is diversified by numerous lakes, magnificent forests of pine and other woods, and the fertile valleys of the Rivers St. John, Restigouche, and Miramichi; timber is the chief export, but only less valuable are its fisheries, while shipbuilding is also an important and growing industry; coal is mined in good quantities, and the chief towns, St. John, Portland, and Fredericton (capital) are busy centres of iron, textile, and other factories; the climate is subject to extremes of heat and cold, but is healthy; many of the inhabitants are of French origin, for New Brunswick formed part of the old French colony of Acadia.

NEW CALEDONIA, an island of the South Pacific belonging to France, the most southerly of the Melanesian group, lying about 800 m. E. of Australia and nearly 1000 m. N. of New Zealand; is mountainous, produces the usual tropical fruits, and exports some nickel, cobalt, coffee, &c.; is used by the French as a convict station; discovered by Captain Cook in 1774 and annexed by France in 1853; Nouméa, on the S.W., is the capital.

NEW ENGLAND, a name given in 1614 by Captain John Smith to the eastern and most densely populated portion of the United States, which now comprises Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut; was first colonised under the name of North Virginia by the Plymouth Company; the inhabitants, known distinctively as Yankees, are mostly of Puritan and Scottish descent, and are noted for their shrewdness and industry.

NEW FOREST, a district in the S.W. of Hampshire, 14 m. from N. to S. and 16 m. wide, and consisting of 92,000 acres, of which 62,000 belong to the Crown demesnes; one-fourth of the area consists of enclosed plantations, chiefly of oak and beech, the rest being open woodland, bog, and heath; Lyndhurst is the principal town.

NEW GUINEA, the largest island in the world (excluding the island continent), lies N. of Australia, from which it is divided by Torres Strait (90 m. wide); is an irregular, mountainous, well-rivered territory, 10 times the size of Scotland, and is held by two European powers—the Dutch in the western and least developed half; the British in the territory of Papua in the eastern half, administered by the Commonwealth of Australia. The north-east region was formerly German, under the name of Kaiser Wilhelm Land, and administered by the German New Guinea Company. It was captured from them by the Australians in 1914. Successful encouragement has been given to colonisation, and good exports of gold, pearl-shells, copra, &c., are made. Much of the interior is still to explore, and is inhabited by Papuans, Negritoes, and other Melanesian tribes. A hot, moist climate gives rise to much endemic fever, but encourages a profusion of tropical growth, giving place in the highlands to the hardier oak and pine, and still higher to a purely alpine flora; as in Australia, the animals are chiefly marsupials; the mountain ranges, which stretch in a more or less continuous line throughout the island, have peaks that touch an altitude of 20,000 ft. and send down many navigable streams. Port Moresby is the capital of the British portion.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, the second most northerly of the New England States (q.v.), and from the beauty of its lake and mountain scenery called the "Switzerland of America." lies N. and S. between Quebec province and Massachusetts, while the Atlantic washes part of its eastern borders; is more engaged in manufactures than in agriculture, and obtains valuable water-power and water-way from its rivers, the Piscataqua, Merrimack, and Connecticut; Manchester, on the Merrimack, is the largest city, with Concord the capital.

NEW HAVEN, capital of New Haven county, Connecticut, and chief city and seaport of the State, at the head of New Haven Bay, 4 m. from Long Island Sound, and 73 m. N.E. of New York; is a finely built city, and, since 1718, has been the seat of Yale College; is an important manufacturing centre, producing rifles, ironware of all kinds, carriages, clocks, &c., and was up till 1873 joint capital of the State with Hartford.

NEW HEREDS, a group of some 30 volcanic islands (20 inhabited) in the Western Pacific, lying W. of the Fiji Islands and N.E. of New Caledonia; is nominally a possession of Britain, and inhabited by cannibals of the Melanesian race. Missionary enterprise has had some effect in the southern islands; Espiritu Santo (70 m. by 40) is the largest.

NEW HOLLAND. See AUSTRALIA.

NEW JERSEY, one of the 13 original States of the American Union, faces the Atlantic between New York State on the N. and Delaware Bay on the S., with Pennsylvania on its western border; the well-watered and fertile central plains favour a prosperous fruit and agricultural industry, tracts of pine and cedar wood cover the sandy S., while the N. is traversed by ranges of the Appalachians, abounding in valuable forests of oak, hickory, chestnut, sawgrass, &c.; minerals are plentiful, especially iron ores. New Jersey is thickly populated, well provided with railway and water transit, and busily engaged in manufactures—e.g. glass, machinery, silk, sugar. Newark (capital) and Jersey City are by far the largest cities.

NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH, a church consisting of the disciples of Emanuel Swedenborg, formed into a separate organisation for worship about 1788. See SWEDENBORGIANISM.

NEW MEXICO, an extensive region in the S.W. of North America, since 1910 one of the United States, 400 m. long and 358 m. wide; was in 1848 detached from Mexico (q.v.), and constituted a part of the American Union; consists mainly of elevated plateau sloping to the S., and traversed by ranges of the Rocky Mountains; precious metals are widely distributed, especially silver; good deposits of coal and copper are also found. It is watered by the Rio Grande, and in the broad river valleys excellent crops are raised, and stock-raising is an important industry. The territory is divided into 14 counties; Santa Fé is the capital; a State university exists at Albuquerque.

NEW ORLEANS, the capital and largest city of Louisiana, is beautifully situated on both sides of the Mississippi, 107 m. from its mouth, with a curved river-frontage of 16 m.; founded in 1718, it was the capital of the old French territory in the south; is the second cotton port of the world, and the greatest sugar-market in the United States; is the chief trade emporium of the surrounding States, and the main outlet for the produce of the Mississippi Valley, which includes cotton, sugar, tobacco, wheat, and salt.

NEW SOUTH WALES, the "mother colony" of Australia, fronts the Pacific for 700 m. on the E. between Queensland (N.) and Victoria (S.), is 2½ times the size of Great Britain and Ireland; mountain ranges (including the Australian Alps) running parallel with, and from 20 to 100 m. distant from, the coast, divide the narrow littoral plains from the great plains of the W. and the interior, and are the source of many large rivers (e.g. the Darling) flowing E. and W.; the climate is warm and everywhere healthy; rain falls plentifully on the coast lands and mountains, but is scarce in the W. The mineral wealth is very great—gold and silver are found in large quantities, as also copper, tin, iron, &c., but coal is the most abundant and valuable mineral product. Cereals, fruits, sugar, tobacco, and vines, are cultivated, but in small quantities compared with the immense output of wool, the chief product of the State. Sydney (q.v.) is the capital and chief port. Government is vested in a Crown-appointed Governor and two Houses of Parliament (triennial and paid). Education is free and compulsory. Established in 1788, the colony was, up to 1840, used as a settlement for transported criminals. In 1851 the great gold discoveries started the State on its prosperous career.

NEW YORK, the foremost State in the American Union in population, wealth, commerce, and manufactures, is the twenty-fifth in area, and is about the size of England; is triangular in shape, with a north-western base on Lakes Erie and Ontario, and an eastern apex reaching the Atlantic between Connecticut (N.) and New Jersey (S.). Manhattan, Staten, and Long Island are the most important of many islands belonging to the State. The land slopes from the mountainous E. to the shores of the great western lakes, and is pleasantly diversified with mountain, valley and plain, forest and river. The Hudson, Oswego, Genesee, and Niagara (with its famous waterfall) are the principal rivers, while the St. Lawrence forms part of the northern boundary. One-half of the area is under cultivation; the vine flourishes; hops and tobacco are grown, and market gardening prospers near the large cities; but manufacturing is the chief industry, and the transit of goods is greatly facilitated by the many waterways and network of railways. Was finally occupied by the English in 1664, after the expulsion of the Dutch.

NEW YORK CITY, including Brooklyn, Jersey City, and other suburban places, the premier city of the American continent, one of the wealthiest in the world, occupies Manhattan Island (131 sq. miles) and several smaller islands at the terminal influence of the Hudson with East River, which opens into Long Island Sound; 18 m. S. of the city is Sandy Hook, where two ship channels cross the bar and lead into the outer or lower bay, which in turn is joined by a strait to the magnificent harbour or inner bay; all approaches are strongly fortified; a suspension bridge spans East River, uniting the city with Brooklyn; the rivers and the many wharves are crowded with shipping. The old town is a busy hive of industry, with its great centres of banking and mercantile enterprise—Wall, New, and Broad Streets. The modern part of the city is a model of regularity, is traversed by great avenues 8 m. in length and 100 ft. wide, the finest being Fifth Avenue. The City Hall and the Court House are of white marble; the hotels are the largest in the world; Astor library (250,000 vols.), academy of design, university, museums, art galleries, and many other handsome buildings adorn the streets; carries on industries of almost every description.

NEW ZEALAND, a British Dominion in the South Pacific, lying wholly within the temperate zone, 1200 m. ENE. of Australia; comprises North Island (45,000 sq. m.), South or Middle Island (58,000 sq. m.), Stewart Island (much smaller), and a number of islets; total area considerably more than that of Great Britain. The two main islands, separated by Cook Strait, are in no part broader than 160 m., and are traversed from end to end by a great and partly volcanic mountain chain, the range in South Island being known as the Southern Alps (highest peak Mount Cook, 12,350 ft.), and that in North Island as the Ruahine Range and the Tararua Mountains; everywhere rivers abound, Waikato (North Island) and Clutha (South Island) being the largest; numerous lakes (Lake Taupo, six times the size of Loch Lomond), fertile valleys, and well-grassed plains, together with the mountains, make up a beautiful and diversified surface, which much resembles that of Scotland, while the climate, temperate and healthy, is warmer and more equable than in Great Britain; almost all the animals have been imported, as well as the grains and fruits; great forests of indigenous kauri pines, however, exist; sheep-farming, agriculture, and mining (gold and coal) are the leading industries, wool being the chief export; Auckland, the largest, and Wellington, the capital, in North Island, and Dunedin and Christchurch in South Island, are the chief towns; Government is vested in a Crown-appointed Governor, an Executive Ministry, and a Parliament of two Chambers; education is free, secular, and compulsory, but no State aid is given to any form of religion; discovered in 1642 by Taran, the islands were first surveyed by Cook in 1769; their formal cession to the British crown took place in 1840.

NEWARK, city of U.S., New Jersey, 7 m. W. of New Jersey City. It has extensive tanneries, and manufactures of hats, thread, and celluloid.

NEWBOLT, SIR HENRY JOHN, British author and poet. The son of a clergyman, he was educated at Clifton and Oxford, and in 1892 he published his first novel. It is chiefly his poems that have made his reputation, notably "Duke's Drum," which appeared in his "The Island Race." He was knighted in 1915 (1862-).

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, a borough and old market-town of Staffordshire, 40 m. S. of Manchester; is a well-built town, actively engaged in brewing, malting, and paper-making.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, a city and county of itself, and chief town of Northumberland; situated on the N. bank, and 10 m. from the mouth of the Tyne, 275 m. N. of London. The old town extends some two miles along the river bank and with its crowded quays, narrow, winding streets, and dingy warehouses, presents a striking contrast to the handsome modern portion, which stretches back on gently rising ground. The cathedral is an imposing and interesting architectural structure, while the public buildings are more than usually ornate. The Colleges of Medicine and of Science are affiliated to Durham University. There are several fine libraries, theatres, hospitals, and charitable institutions, and the city is especially well off in the matter of public parks and pleasure grounds. Four bridges (including Robert Stephenson's famous High Level Bridge) span the river and connect Newcastle with Gateshead. It is the chief centre of the English coal trade, and is a busy hive of all kinds of metallic, chemical, machinery, and kindred works, which give rise to an immense shipping trade. As a centre of British shipbuilding the Tyne is second only to the Clyde.

NEWCOMEN, THOMAS, blacksmith, born in Dartmouth; invented a steam-engine in which the piston was raised by steam and driven down by the atmosphere after the injection into the cylinder of a squirt of cold water, which cooled it, so that the steam when injected did not raise up the piston at once. By James Watt's invention of a separate condenser it was superseded, and employed afterwards principally for pumping water. The interruption in the movement between the descent and ascent of the piston made it worthless for many purposes (1668-1729).

NEWDIGATE, SIR ROGER, born in Warwickshire; represented Oxford in Parliament, and founded in 1805 the Newdigate Prize for the best English poem by an undergraduate (1719-1806).

NEWFOUNDLAND, the oldest island dominion of Britain, situated at the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, North America; is about one-eighth larger than Ireland, and triangular in shape, the northern apex running close in to the coast of Labrador; inland the country is bleak, sparsely populated, and ill cultivated; lakes and rivers abound; the deeply indented coast provides excellent harbours for the large fishing fleets that frequent it; minerals are found, including coal, iron, lead, and copper; agriculture and timber-felling are on the increase, but the fisheries—cod, salmon, herring, and seal—form the staple industry; the climate is more temperate than in Canada, although subject to fogs; St. John's (q.v.) is the capital; discovered in 1497 by John Cabot, seized by the English in 1583, and finally ceded to Britain by the French (who retained certain fishing rights) in 1713; Newfoundland possesses a responsible government, consisting of a popularly elected Assembly and a Crown-appointed Governor, and exercises political rights over the adjoining coast territory of Labrador.

NEWGATE, a former dark, gloomy prison in London, the original of which dates as far back as 1218; was two centuries afterwards rebuilt, and destroyed in the great fire of 1666; rebuilt in 1770; demolished in 1904 and the Central Criminal Court built on its site.

NEWMAN, FRANCIS WILLIAM, man of letters, born in London, brother of the following, with whom he was wholly out of sympathy, and at the opposite pole; he was a theist in his religious opinions, and wrote in defence of them his principal works, "The Soul: Her Sorrows and Aspirations," and "Phases of Faith" (1805-1807).

NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY, cardinal, born in London, son of a banker; educated at Ealing, studied at Trinity College, Oxford, and obtained a Fellowship in Oriel College in 1823; trained in evangelical beliefs, he gradually drifted into High Church notions, and becoming vicar of St. Mary's, the university church of Oxford, in 1828, started the Tractarian Movement in 1833, and, busy with his pen, wrote no fewer than 24 of the celebrated "Tracts for the Times" in advocacy of High Church teaching, till Tract XC., which he composed, overrode the mark, and he resigned his connection with the Church of England, and was received into the Catholic Church on October 28, 1845; shortly after this he visited Rome, was ordained a priest, and after some stay there on his return became head of the Birmingham Oratory in 1849, where he spent over 40 years; was made a cardinal in 1879; the influence on Church matters which he exercised as university preacher at Oxford was very great, and made itself felt through his voluminous writings over the length and breadth of the Church; on his secession he continued to employ his pen in defence of his position, particularly in one work, now widely known, entitled "Apologia pro Vita Sua"; what he wrote was for the time he lived in, and little of it except certain of his hymns, notably "Lead, Kindly Light," and his poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," has long survived him (1801-1890).

NEWMHAM COLLEGE, a college for women at Cambridge, founded in 1875; since 1922 women have been admitted to the degree of B.A. of the University of Cambridge; there are over two hundred students.

NEWPORT, (1) capital of the Isle of Wight, and near its centre; in its vicinity is Carisbrooke Castle, where Charles I. was imprisoned. (2) The largest town in Monmouth, at the mouth of the Usk, engaged in manufacture of various kinds, but chiefly as a port for the export of minerals, which is very large. (3) A town in Rhode Island, U.S., a fashionable watering-place, as well as a manufacturing town; was for a time the residence of Bishop Berkeley.

NEWSPAPERS were first circulated in Italy in the 16th century, and the fee to readers was a gazetta (less than 2d. in value), hence the name of so many papers. In England news-letters and broadsheets became common early in the 17th century, and a Weekly News was published in London in 1622. The London Gazette was founded in 1665, the Morning Post in 1772, and the Times in 1788; out of London the oldest daily paper is the Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

NEWSTEAD ABBEY, an abbey near Nottingham, founded by Henry II. by way of atonement for the murder of Thomas à Becket, which was given at the dissolution of the monasteries to an ancestor of Lord Byron, who lived in it and sold it, since when it has been restored.

NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, illustrious natural philosopher, born in Woolsthorpe, near Grantham, in Lincolnshire; entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1661, where he applied himself specially to the study of mathematics, invented the method of fluxions (q.v.), and began to theorise on gravitation, graduating in 1667, and becoming professor of Mathematics in 1669; falling at first, from a mistaken judgment given of the earth's diameter, in his attempt to establish the theory on gravitation as to the motions of the earth and moon, he set to the construction of telescopes, and discovered the composition of light; shortly after this, hearing of a correction of the measurement required, he renewed his study of gravitation, and made his theory good in a series of papers communicated to the Royal Society, though it was not till 1687, encouraged by Halley, that he gave the complete demonstration in his "Principia" to the world; in 1695 he was made Warden of the Mint, and afterwards Master, a post he held till his death; his works were numerous, and he wrote on prophecy as well as treatises on science (1642-1727).

NEWTON, JOHN, English clergyman, born in London; after a wild youth as sailor and slave-trader was converted, entered the Church, and became curate of Olney, where he became acquainted with Cowper, and had, owing to his severe Calvinism, an influence over him not altogether for good; was associated with the poet in the production of the "Olney Hymns"; wrote "Cardiphonia" (1725-1807).

NEWTON, THOMAS, English divine; edited Milton's "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained," with notes, and wrote "Dissertations on the Prophecies" (1704-76).

NEY, MICHEL, peer and marshal of France, born in Saarlouis, son of a cooper; entered the army as a private hussar in 1797; distinguished himself by his bravery in the wars of the Revolution and the Empire, and earned for himself from the army under Napoleon, and from Napoleon himself, the title of the "Bravest of the brave"; on the emperor's abdication in 1814 he attached himself to Louis XVIII., but on Napoleon's return from Elba he joined his old master, and stood by him during the hundred days; on the second Restoration he was arrested, tried by his peers, and shot (1769-1815).

NGAMI, LAKE, a shallow sheet of water 50 m. long in S. Africa, on the borders of the Kalahari Desert, which is always changing its margin; is at one time, from the rains, sweet and drinkable, and at another time, from drought, saline; it is infested with crocodiles, and swarms with fish; was discovered by Livingston in 1849.

NIAGARA, a section of the St. Lawrence River, in N. America, extending between Lakes Erie and Ontario, having a descent throughout its course of 36 m. of 328 ft., the Falls, preceded and succeeded by rapids, being among the largest in the world; the Canadian or Horse Shoe Fall is 3000 ft. wide, with a descent of 158 ft., and the American Fall one-third of the width of the Canadian, with a descent of over 162 ft.

NIAM-NIAM, a people of the E. Sudan, SE. of Darfur, occupying territory between the basins of the Nile and the Congo; are mostly cannibals.

NIBELUNG, king of the Nibelungen, a mythical Burgundian tribe, the fabulous possessor of a hoard of wealth so inexhaustible that "twelve waggons in twelve days, at the rate of three journeys a day, could not carry it off"; this treasure he bequeathed to his two sons on his deathbed, by the vanquishing of whom the hoard fell into the hands of the redoubtable hero Siegfried.

NIBELUNGEN LIED (i.e. Lay of the Nibelungen), an old German epic, of date, it is presumed, earlier than the 12th century; it consists of two parts, the first ending with the murder of Siegfried by Hagen, his wresting of the hoard (see supra) from his widow, Kriemhild, and burying it at the bottom of the Rhine; and the second relating the vengeance of Kriemhild and the annihilation of the whole Burgundian race, Kriemhild included, to whom the treasure had originally belonged; to the latter part the name of the Nibelungen Not (or Distress) has been given.

NICARAGUA, the largest and richest of five republics occupying Central America, stretches across the isthmus from the Pacific to the Caribbean Sea, between Honduras (N.) and Costa Rica (S.); the Cordilleras traverse the heart of the country, and the immense valleys of the W. are remarkable for the two great southern lakes, Nicaragua and Managua, which are studded with volcanic islands; rich in gold, silver, copper, and coal, with vast forests of mahogany, rosewood, &c., splendid pastures and a fertile soil; the country has through misgovernment and a bad climate remained in a backward state, but in recent times much has been done to remedy this; hides, bananas, coffee, and indiarubber are the chief exports, and a good deal of mining goes on; the great ship-canal from the Pacific to the Caribbean was opened in 1914; Managua is the capital; Nicaragua asserted its independence from Spain in 1821, and has since been rent by countless revolutions; a president and a congress of 48 administer its affairs.

NICE, or NICEA, an ancient city of Bithynia, in Asia Minor, celebrated as the seat of two oecumenical councils of the Church, the first, presided over by Constantine in 325, which condemned Arianism, and the second, under the Empress Irene in 787, which deliberated on image-worship.

NICE, capital of the department Alpes-Maritimes, France, charmingly situated on the Mediterranean coast near the Italian border; terraced hills shelter it on the N., and its genial and equable climate makes it a favourite winter resort; the Paigione, a small stream, divides the old and modern portion; Castle Hill, with ruins and pleasure gardens, the cathedral, art-gallery, &c., are features of interest; olive-oil is the chief export, and artistic pottery, perfumery, &c., are manufactured.

NICENE CREED, a creed established as orthodox at Nice (q.v.), which affirmed as against Arianism that Christ as Son of God was not merely of like substance, but of the same substance with the Father.

NICHOLAS, the name of five Popes: N. I., St., sur-named the Great, Pope from 858 to 867, asserted the supremacy of the papal see, Festival, Nov. 13; N. II., Pope from 1058 to 1061; N. III., Pope from 1277 to 1280; N. IV., Pope from 1288 to 1292; N. V., Pope from 1447 to 1456, after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, took the exiled Greek scholars under his protection, fostered the learning of the East, and laid the foundation of the Vatican Library by the collection of over 5000 Greek and Latin MSS.

NICHOLAS, ST., the patron saint of boys, sailors, and of Russia and Aberdeen, as well as other towns; was bishop of Myra, persecuted under Diocletian; is generally represented in bishop's robes, and has either three purses or three children as his attributes; the three children and the three purses refer to one and the same story: St. Nicholas, on learning that a father who had three daughters was tempted by extreme poverty to expose them to a life of dishonour, went by night and threw into the window of the house three bags of money, which served as a marriage portion for each, and thus rescued them from a life of shame.

NICHOLAS I., czar of Russia, born in St. Petersburg, third son of Paul I., ascended the throne in 1825 in succession to Alexander I., his eldest brother; suppressed with rigour and not a little severity a formidable conspiracy which took form on his accession; took up arms against Persia and wrested Erivan from its sway, struggled against both the Poles and the Turks till his overbearing policy against the latter provoked a coalition of France, England, and Sardinia to their defence in the Crimean War, which was still going on when he died; in 1848 he aided Austria in the suppression of the Hungarian insurrection (1796-1855).

NICHOLAS II., czar of Russia. The eldest son of Alexander III., he had a short military career before succeeding to the throne in 1894. His reign saw the abolition of the last traces of serfdom, the growth of industrial and political unrest, the Great War, and the revolution. A weak monarch in the hands of his advisers, notably his cousin, the Grand Duke Nicholas (q.v.) and Rasputin (q.v.), he was powerless to stay the march of events. He was forced to abdicate in March, 1917, went to his estate in the Crimea, was arrested and sent to Tobolsk, and later to Ekaterinburg, where in July, 1918, he was executed, with his wife, formerly Princess Alix of Hesse, whom he had married in 1894, and other members of his family (1868-1918).

NICHOLAS, THE GRAND DUKE, Russian general. A cousin of Czar Nicholas II. (q.v.), he was twelve years his senior; embarking on a military career, he secured the command of the Russian armies in 1914; in 1915 he took command in the Caucasus and conquered Turkish Armenia. At the revolution he was exiled to the Crimea, but was allowed to go to Italy in 1919 (1856-1920).

NICHOLSON, JOHN, an Indian officer, born in Dublin, son of a physician; served in the Sikh Wars, and at the outbreak of the Mutiny in 1857 in the Punjab helped to crush it in the bud; a brigadier-general, he led the attack at the siege of Delhi, Sept. 14; but fell mortally wounded as the storming party were entering the Kabul Gate (1821-1857).

NICHOLSON, WILLIAM, British artist. Born in Newark, he eventually achieved considerable reputation as a portrait and still-life painter (1872-).

NICKEL, a hard white metal, which is feebly magnetic and does not rust in air; it is used extensively for plating other metals and enters into the composition of many alloys, such as nickel silver and German silver; steel containing nickel is very tough and is used for certain engineering purposes; invar, steel with 35 per cent. of nickel, has a very small heat expansion and is used for pendulums.

NICOBAR ISLANDS, a group of picturesque islands in the Indian Ocean, S. of the Andaman Islands and midway between Ceylon and the Malay Peninsula; 14 of the 20 islands are inhabited, chiefly by indigenous Indians and Malays; after being in the hands of Denmark for upwards of 100 years, they were annexed by Britain in 1869; trade is carried on with India in coco-nuts, ambergris, tortoise-shell, &c.

NICOLAÏTANS, a sect of heretics that arose in the Apostolic Church, presumed to have been a party of professing Christians of Gentile descent, who, after their profession, continued to take part in the heathen festivals, and to have contributed to break down the distinction between the Church and the world.

NICOLÉ, PIERRE, French divine and moralist, born in Chartres, a Port-Royalist (q.v.), friend of Arnauld and Pascal; was along with the former author of the famous "Port Royal Logic" (1625-1695).

NICOLL, SIR WILLIAM ROBERTSON, British writer. Ordained a Nonconformist minister in 1874, he took over in 1886 the editorship of the British Weekly, and exerted considerable influence on Liberal and Nonconformist thought; he also produced books on religion and literature (1851-1923).

NICOTINE, an alkaloid present in the tobacco plant.

NIEBUHR, BARTHOLO GEORG, distinguished historian, born in Copenhagen, son of the succeeding; studied at Kiel, and for a time at London and Edinburgh; after various civil appointments in Denmark, entered the civil service of Prussia in 1806; on the establishment of the university of Berlin in 1810 gave in connection with it a course of lectures on Roman history, by which he established his reputation as a historian, several of the conclusions of which he afterwards confirmed during his residence as ambassador at the Papal Court at Rome from 1816 to 1823; the revolution of the three days of July, 1830, in Paris threatening, as he thought, a recurrence of the horrors of the first, gave him such a shock that he sickened of it and died; by his treatment of the history of Rome he introduced a new era in the treatment of history generally, which consisted in expiscating all the fabulous from the story and working on the residuum of authenticated fact, without, however, as would appear, taking due account of the influence of the faith of the people on the facts, and the effect of the latter on the life and destiny of the nation whose history it was his purpose to relate (1776-1831).

NIEBUHR, KARSTEN, a celebrated traveller, born in Hanover; joined a Danish expedition in exploration of Arabia, and alone of the members of it returned home, which he did by way of Persia, Palestine, and Cyprus, and wrote an account of the results of his researches (1733-1815).

NIEL, ADOLPHE, French marshal, born in Muret; entered the Engineers 1825, served in the Algerine War in 1835, before Rome in 1849, at Bomarsund in 1854, at Sebastopol in 1856, as well as at Magenta and Solferino, and finally became Minister of War (1802-1809).

NIEPCE, JOSEPH NICÉPHORE, French chemist, born in Châlons-sur-Saône; inventor of photography, the method of effecting which he achieved after long brooding in 1824, and afterwards communicated to Daguerre, with whom he entered into partnership, and who made it known after his death (1765-1833).

NIEZSCHÉ, FRIEDRICH, German writer and philosopher. At the age of 25 he became a professor at Basel, was compelled to resign ten years later on account of his health, and in 1900 he died after ten years of insanity. His most famous work, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," had a tremendous influence on German literature and national thought with its advocacy of the super-man, and its doctrine that strength alone is admirable and weakness the only vice, a doctrine that found sufficient followers in his country to lead to the disaster of the Great War (1844-1900).

NIFLHEIM, or Mist-Home, in the Norse mythology the primeval northern region of cold and darkness, in contrast with Muspelheim, or Bright-home, the primeval southern region of warmth and light, the two poles, as it were, of the Norse world.

NIGER, a great river of Western Africa, whose headwaters rise amid the Kong Mountains behind Sierra Leone; flowing N.E. as far as Fimbucoo (2 m. from the river), it then bends gradually southward, receives from the E. its great affluent the Benue, and about 100 m. from the coast begins to form a wide forest and jungle-covered delta (larger than that of the Nile), and finally flows into the Gulf of Guinea by 22 mouths after a course of some 2600 m. Forms, with the Benue, an invaluable highway into the heart of the country; its upper and middle parts, under the name Joliba, are within the French sphere, and the lower portion below Say is under English authority.

NIGERIA extends along the Right of Benin, from Dahomey to the Cameroons, and has an area of 336,000 sq. m. and a population of 18½ millions. Its capital is Lagos, from which it has a railway to Kano, 705 m. long, and another line runs from Port Harcourt to the Udi coalfields, which are being largely developed, the coal being of good quality. Among its exports, which are mainly agricultural, is tin, which comes from mines and from dredgings in the rivers.

NIGHTINGALE, FLORENCE, a famous philanthropic nurse, born in Florence, of wealthy English parentage; at the age of 22 entered the Institution of Protestant Deaconesses at Kaiserswerth to be trained as a nurse, and afterwards studied the methods of nursing and hospital management with the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, Paris; after thoroughly reorganizing Harley Street Hospital, London, in 1854 she volunteered to organise a staff of nurses to tend the wounded soldiers in the Crimea; arriving at Scutari on the eve of Inkermann during the terrible winter of 1854-1855, she ministered with unwearied devotion to the suffering soldiers; on her return in 1856 she established, with public support, a training college for nurses at St. Thomas's and at King's College Hospital; she was author of "Notes on Nursing," "Notes on Hospitals," &c. (1820-1910).

Nihilism, the principles of a movement on the part of the educated classes in Russia which repudiated the existing creed and organisation of society, and insisted on a root-and-branch wholesale abolition of them and a reconstruction of them on communist principles, and for the purely secular and everyday ends of common life, subordinating every thing in the first place to the feeding, clothing, and lodging of human beings in a manner worthy of their rank in the scale of being. The term Nihilism is also applied to those philosophical systems which sweep the course clear of all incredibilities and irrationalities, but leave us bare of all our inherited spiritual possessions.

NILNI-NOVGOROD, capital of a Russian province of the same name, situated at the confluence of the Oka with the Volga, 274 m. E. of Moscow, for years the seat of Peter-Paul's Fair, the greatest in the world, from July to September, attracting merchants from Asia and Europe.

NILE, the longest river of Africa, and one of the most noted in the world's history; the Shimru, Ianna, and other streams which flow into Victoria Nyanza from the S. are regarded as its ultimate headwaters; from Victoria Nyanza, the Victoria Nile or Somerset River holds a north-westerly course to Albert Nyanza, whence it issues under the name of the Bahr-el-Jebel, swelled by the waters of the Semliki from Albert Edward Nyanza; about 650 m. N. it is joined by the Bahr-el-Ghazal from the W., and bending to the E., now under the name White Nile, receives on that side the Sobat, and as a sluggish navigable stream flows past Fashoda on to Khartoum, where it is met by the Bahr-el-Azrak or Blue Nile; 200 m. lower it receives the Atbara or Black Nile. Through Egypt the river's course is confined to a valley some 10 m. broad, which owes its great fertility to the alluvial deposits left by the river during its annual overflow (July to October, caused by seasonal rains in Abyssinia, &c.). From Khartoum to Assuan occur the cataracts; below this the stream is navigable. A few miles N. of Cairo begins the delta, which lies within the Rosetta and Damietta—two main branches of the divided river—and is some 150 m. broad at its base. From Victoria Nyanza to the coast the river measures about 3400 m.

NILSON, CHRISTINE, an operatic singer, born in Sweden, daughter of a peasant, and one of the foremost sopranos of her day; distinguished for her dramatic talent no less than by her powers as a vocalist (1843-1882).

NIMEGUEN, an interesting old Dutch town in Guelderland, on the Waal, 73 m. E. of Rotterdam; has a fine 13th-century Gothic church and other notable buildings; its prosperous manufactures include tobacco, perfume, beer, &c.; here, in 1678-1679, France effected famous peace treaties with Holland, Spain, and Austria.

NIMES, or NISMES, capital of the department of Gard, S. of France, lies surrounded by the Cevennes in the fertile valley of the Vistre, 31 m. E. of Montpellier; has unique Roman remains, including an imposing amphitheatre, now used as a bull-arena, the noble Corinthian "Maison Carrée," a mausoleum, baths, &c.; textiles (silk, cotton, &c.), wines, and brandy are the chief articles of manufacture; it declared for the Reformation in 1559, and suffered cruelly on the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

NIMROD, an early king of Amyria or Babylonia, characterised in Scripture (Gen. x. 9) as "a mighty hunter before the Lord"; a name now applied to a distinguished hunter.

NINE WORTHIES. The nine worthies were Hector, Alexander, and Julius Cæsar, who were pagans, Joshua, David, and Judas Maccabeus, who were Jews, and King; thurs, Charlemagne, and Godfrey de Bouillon, who were Christians. The Nine Worthies of London, according to Richard Johnson, who wrote "The Seven Champions of Christendom," were Sir William Walworth, Sir Henry Pritchard, Sir William Sevenoke, Sir Thomas White, Sir John Benham, Christopher Croker, Sir John Hawkwood, Sir Hugh Calverley, and Sir Henry Mauleverer.

NINETEEN-SIXTEEN REBELLION, a serious anti-British rising in Dublin; organised by Blum Foin with German assistance, it broke into open armed rebellion on April 24, 1916, and stern measures had to be taken by the British military authorities before it was suppressed.

NINEVEH, a great city, capital of ancient Amyria, which stood on the left bank of the Tigris, opposite the modern town of Mosul, said to have been included within a wall 60 m. long, 100 ft. high, the breadth of three chariots in width, and defended by 1500 towers each 200 ft. in height. See NAKUR.

NINIAN, ST., early apostle of Christianity to the southern Picts of Scotland, born on the shores of the Solway, of noble descent; went to Rome, was consecrated by the Pope, visited St. Martin at Tours on his way back; had founded a church at Whithorn, Wigtownshire, which he dedicated to St. Martin on his return, and died there, "perfect in life and full of years," in 432.

NINUS, a legendary king of Amyria, a celebrated conqueror, to whom tradition assigns the founding of Nineveh.

NIOBE, in the Greek mythology the daughter of Tantalus, and wife of Amphion, king of Thebes, to whom she bore six sons and six daughters, in her pride of whom she rated herself above Leto, who had given birth to only two children, Apollo and Artemis, whereupon they, indignant at this insult to their mother, gave themselves for nine days to the slaughter of Niobe's offspring, and on the tenth the gods buried them; Niobe, in her grief, retired to Mount Sipylon, in Lydia, where her body became cold and rigid as stone, but not her tears, which, ever as the summer months returned, burst forth anew.

NIPPON, or NIHON, the native name for Japan.

NIRVANA, the name given to the consummation of bliss in the Hindu, but especially the Buddhist, religious, synonymous with extinction, which in the Hindu creed means the extinction of individuality by absorption in the Divine Being, and in Buddhism, not, as some presume, the extinction of existence, but the extinction of agitation of mind through the crucifixion of all passion and desire, the attainment of self-centred, self-sufficient quiescence of being, or rest and peace of soul.

NISUS, a Trojan youth who accompanied Aeneas into Italy, and whose friendship for Euryulus is so pathetically immortalized by Virgil in the ninth book of the "Æneid."

NITHEADLE, WILLIAM MAXWELL, EARL OF, a noted Catholic, who took part in the Jacobite rising of 1715, was captured at Preston, found guilty of treason, and sentenced to death: the night before the day appointed for his execution (February 24, 1716) he effected an escape from the Tower by exchanging clothes with his daring and devoted countess, who had been admitted to his room; he fled to Rome, where he lived in happiness with his wife until her death (1676-1744).

NITRE, or saltpetre, nitrate of potash found as a mineral and used as a fertiliser; it is one of the constituents of gunpowder; a similar substance, nitrate of soda, is known as Chile saltpetre, on account of the large deposits found in that country.

NITROGEN, the gaseous element which constitutes about four-fifths of the air; all forms of life need nitrogen for the building up of proteins; animals are dependent upon the proteins already formed in the food, and all plants, except the bean family, can only build them up from nitrogen compounds in the soil, which sooner or later become exhausted, so that the soil has to be treated with fertilisers; in recent years the supplies of mineral nitrates have shown signs of exhaustion and methods have been devised for producing nitrogen compounds from the free nitrogen in the atmosphere.

NITROGLYCERINE is formed by the action of nitric acid on glycerine; it explodes violently on detonation and is used for the manufacture of dynamite, blasting gelatine, and cordite, &c.

NITROUS OXIDE, a gas prepared by heating ammonium nitrate; used by dentists as an anæsthetic; also known as "laughing gas."

NITZSCH, KARL EMMANUEL, German theologian, born in Borna; became professor at Bonn, Saxony, in 1822, whence in 1847 he was removed to succeed Marheineke at Berlin; was of the Schleiermacher school of theologians, and author, among other works, of a "System der Christlichen Lehre" and "Practischen Theologie," the latter in evidence of the importance the author attached to the ethical element in the Christian religion (1787-1868).

NIVELLE, ROBERT GEORGES, French general. Born in Tulle, he joined the army in 1878, served in Tunisia, Algeria, and China, and in 1914 took command of an artillery Regiment in Alsace; he took part at the Aisne, at Verdun in 1916, and in the same year succeeded Joffre as commander-in-chief; after heavy French losses in 1917 he was transferred to N. Africa (1856-1924).

NOMINALISM, the name given to the theory of those among the Scholastics who maintained that general notions, which we denote by general terms, are only names, empty conceptions without reality, that there was no such thing as pure thought, only conception and sensuous perception, whereas realists, after Plato, held by the objective reality of universals. And, indeed, it is not as modern philosophy affirms, in the particular of the individual, in which alone, according to the Nominalists, reality resides, but in the universal, in regard to which the particular is nothing if it does not refer.

NONCONFORMISTS, a name originally applied to the clergy of the Established Church of England, some two thousand, who in 1662 resigned their livings rather than submit to the terms of the Act of Uniformity passed on August 24 that year, and now applied to the whole Dissenting body in England.

NONES, in the Roman calendar the ninth day before the Ides (q.v.), being the 7th of March, May, July, and October, and the 5th of the rest.

NONJURORS, a name given to that section of the Episcopal party in England who, having sworn fealty to James II., refused to take the oath of allegiance to William III., six of whom among the bishops for their obstinacy were deprived of their sees.

NO-POPEY RIOTS, name given principally to riots in London in June, 1780, due to the zeal of Lord George Gordon (q.v.), ending in the death of some 800 persons.

NORDENSKIÖLD, NILS ADOLF ERIK, BARON, a Swedish naturalist, born in Helsinki; after several successive voyages and explorations in the Arctic Sea, in which he paid frequent visits to Spitzbergen, where he measured an arc of the meridian, in 1878-1879 he discovered the North-East Passage by traversing, along the N. shores of Europe and Asia, the whole Arctic Sea from the Atlantic to the Pacific; he wrote accounts of his expeditions (1882-1901).

NORDKYN (i.e. north chin), the most northerly point in Norway, and of the continent of Europe generally.

NORE, MUTINY AT THE, a mutiny in the fleet stationed at the Nore, an anchorage off Sheerness, in the Thames, which broke out on May 20, 1797, and was not suppressed till June 15, for which the ringleaders were tried and hanged; the mutiny arose from alleged grievances—bad food, insufficient pay and official tyranny—on the part of the seamen, but is believed to have been fostered by revolutionary agents.

NORFOLK, an eastern maritime county of England, lies N. of Suffolk, and presents a long eastern and northern foreshore (90 m.) to the North Sea; the Wash lies on the NW. border; light fertile soils and an undulating, well-watered surface favour an extensive and highly developed agriculture, of which fruit-growing and market-gardening are special features; rabbits and game abound in the great woods and sand-dunes; the chief rivers are the Ouse, Bure, and Yare, and these and other streams form in their courses a remarkable series of inland lakes known as the Broads (q.v.); its antiquities of Roman and Saxon times are many and peculiarly interesting.

NORFOLK ISLAND, a small precipitous island in the Western Pacific, midway between New Caledonia and New Zealand, 400 m. NW. of the latter; its inhabitants, many of whom came from Pitcairn Island, and now number fewer than 1000, govern themselves under the superintendence of New South Wales.

NORMAN ARCHITECTURE, a massive architecture introduced into England, particularly in the construction of churches, abbeys, &c., by the Normans even before the Conquest, which was in vogue in the country till the end of Henry II.'s reign, and which is characterized by the prevalence of the rounded arch.

NORMANDY, an ancient province of France, fronting the English Channel, NE. of Brittany; received its name from the Normen who, under Rollo, established themselves there in the 10th century; was for a long time an appanage of the English crown after the Norman Conquest; after being taken and retaken, was finally lost to England in 1450; it became practically a part of France when it was taken by Philip Augustus in 1204; it is now represented by the five départements Seine-Inférieure, Eure, Orne, Calvados, and Manche.

NORNIR, or NORNE, in the Norse mythology the three Fates—the Past, the Present, and the Future; maidens or dames who water the roots of Yggdrasil (q.v.), the ash-tree of existence, and determine the destinies of both gods and men.

NORTHERN IRELAND, an area consisting of the cities of Belfast, Londonderry and Armagh, and the counties of Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry, and Tyrone. Granted Home Rule in 1920, it is governed by a Governor-General, Senate, and House of Commons, and sends 18 representatives to the Imperial House of Commons. Belfast is the capital, and the chief industries are agriculture, shipbuilding, flax-spinning, linen-making, and distilling. The province contains nearly all the Protestants of Ireland.

NORTHMEN, or NORSEMEN, the name given in the Middle Ages to the sea-roving, adventure-loving inhabitants of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark; in their sea-rovings they were little better than pirates, but they had this excuse, their home was narrow and their lands barren, and it was a necessity for them to sail forth and see what they could plunder and carry away in richer lands; they were men of great daring, their early religion definable as the consecration of valour, and they were the terror of the quieter nations whose lands they invaded; at first their invasions were mere raids for plunder, but at length they were satisfied with nothing less than conquest and the permanent occupancy of the lands they subdued, settling some of them on the shores of England and France, and even in the S. of Italy; these invasions were common and frequent during the whole of the 9th and the early part of the 10th centuries; according to their sagas they were the first Europeans to visit America.

NORTHUMBERLAND, the most northerly county of England, lies on the border of Scotland, from which it is separated by the Cheviots and the Tweed; its eastern shore, off which lie the Farne Islands, Lindisfarne, and Coquet Isle, N. of Durham, fronts the North Sea; it is fifth in size of the English counties; in the N. the Cheviot slopes form excellent pasturage, but the Pennine Range towards the W. presents dreary and less valuable moorland; on the W. are arable lowlands; Tweed, Tyne, Till, Alne, Wansbeck, are the chief rivers. Its great coalfield in the S.E. is the most celebrated in the world, and is the county's greatest source of wealth, and includes upwards of 100 collieries; Newcastle, Alnwick (county town), Hexham, and North Shields are the principal towns. Within its borders were fought the battles of Otterburn, Homildon Hill, and Flodden.

NORTHUMBRIA, one of the ancient English kingdoms; comprised the eastern half of the island from the Humber to the Firth of North, and was divided into the Northern Bernicia and the Southern Deira; was founded in 547 by Ida the Angle.

NORTHWICH, a town in Cheshire, with springs in and around of brine, from which salt has been procured for centuries.

NORTON, CHARLES ELIOT, American litterateur, born in Cambridge, Massachusetts; travelled a good deal in Europe; edited, with Lowell, the North American Review and the early Letters of Carlyle, as well as the "Reminiscences," which had been too carelessly edited by Froude (1827-1908).

NORTON, MRS., English novelist and poet, née Sheridan, granddaughter of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, authoress of "Stuart of Dunleath," "Lost and Saved," &c., described by Lockhart as "the Byron of poetesses," figures in Meredith's "Diana of the Crossways" (1808-1877).

NORWAY, a kingdom of North Europe, comprising the western side of the Scandinavian peninsula, and separated from Sweden on the E. by the Kjölen Mountains; the Arctic and Atlantic Oceans beat upon its long and serrated western seaboard, forcing a way up the many narrow and sinuous fiords; Sogne Fiord, the longest, runs into the heart of the country 100 m.; off the northern coast lie the Lofodens, while the Skerries skirt the E. The country forms a strip of irregular and mountainous coastland 1160 m. long, which narrows down at its least breadth to 26 m.; 70 per cent. of the surface is uncultivable, and 24 per cent. is forest; the lakes number 80,000, of which Lake Wenner (2136 sq. m.) is the largest; immense glaciers are found in the great mountain barrier, and innumerable rivers run short and rapid courses to the Atlantic and to the Skager-Rak in the S.; the Glommen, flowing into Christiania Fiord, is the largest (400 m.). The climate of the W. coast districts is tempered by the Gulf Stream drift; inland there is a decrease in the rainfall, but much intenser cold is experienced. The wealth of the country lies in its forests and fisheries, mines and shipping; only 2 per cent. of the land-surface is under cultivation, and 2·8 per cent. is utilised for grazing; the copper, iron, and silver mines are declining. Oslo or Christiania, (the capital) is the centre of the industrial area. The Norwegians are intensely democratic (titles and nobility were abolished in the year 1821), and although under a king (Haakon VII), they enjoy democratic home rule, no members of the Storting (Parliament) being paid. Education is free and compulsory, and the bulk of the people are Lutherans. The monetary unit is the Krone (= 1s. 1½d.). Norway, originally inhabited by Lapps and Gothic tribes, was first united by Harold Haarfager (A.D. 863-930), and subsequently welded into a Christian kingdom by his descendant St. Olaf (1015). From 1536 it was held as a conquered province by Denmark up to 1814; in that year it was joined to Sweden, but the union came to an end in 1905.

NORWICH, (1) an ancient cathedral city and county town of Norfolk, on the Wensum. Immediately above its junction with the Yare, 114 m. O'CONNELL, DANIEL, Irish patriot, known as the "Liberator," born near Cahirciveen, co. Kerry; educated at St. Omer, Douay, and Lincoln's Inn; was called to the Irish bar in 1798, and was for twenty-two years a famous and prosperous practitioner on the Munster circuit; turning to politics, he became leader of the Catholics in 1811, his object being the removal of the Catholic disabilities; the Catholic Association of 1823 was organised by him, which he induced the priesthood to join, and awakened irresistible enthusiasm throughout the country; the electors now began to vote independently, and O'Connell was returned for Clare in 1828; the House refused to admit him; but so strong, and at the same time so orderly, was the agitation in Ireland, that in 1829 the Catholic disabilities were removed, and O'Connell, returned again for Clare, took his seat in the House of Commons; next year he represented Waterford in the new Parliament, and subsequently Kerry, Dublin, Kilkenny, and Cork; he now formed a society for promoting the repeal of the Union, which survived several suppressions, and reappeared under different names; but in spite of his exertions in the House and in the country the cause languished, till, in 1843, as Lord Mayor of Dublin, he carried a resolution in its favour in the City Council; but now under the pressure of less experienced agitators, his monster meetings and other proceedings began to overstep legal limits, and in 1844 he, with six of his supporters, was indicted for raising sedition; he was sentenced to a year's imprisonment and a fine of £2000, but the sentence was set aside in 14 weeks; by this time the Young Ireland party had broken away from him, the potato famine came, he was conscious of failure, and his health was broken; he died on his way to Rome, at Genoa; a man of great physical strength and energy, and a master of oratory, he gave himself unselfishly to serve his country, sacrificing a legal practice worth £7000 a year, honestly administering the immense sums contributed, and spending his private means for his cause; with an undeniable taint of meaneness, violence, and scurrility in his nature, he was yet a man of independent and liberal mind, an opponent of rebellion, loyal to his sovereign, a great and sincere patriot (1775-1847).

O'CONNOR, THOMAS POWER, British politician. He started his career as a journalist in 1867, entered Parliament in 1880 as an Irish Nationalist, and retained the party label after the Irish question had been disposed of. He became Father of the House of Commons, but never gave up his journalistic work, founding and editing the Star among other papers (1848-1929).

OCTAVIA, the sister of Augustus, a woman distinguished for her beauty and her virtue; was married first to Marcellus, and on his death to Mark Antony, who forsook her for Cleopatra, but to whom she remained true, even on his miserable end, nursing his children by Cleopatra together with her own; one other grief she had to endure in the death of her son Marcellus (q.v.) by her former husband, the destined successor of Augustus on the throne; d. 11 B.C.

OCTOBER, the tenth month of the year so called (i.e. the eighth) by the Romans, whose year began in March.

ODDFELLOWS, the name of several friendly societies. The Independent Order of Oddfellows, Manchester Unity, is the largest and most important of the number. It has been the pioneer in many important movements of the kind, and several of the provisions now compulsory on all societies it observed of its own accord prior to their enactment; the actuarial tables compiled from its statistics in 1845 by its secretary, Henry Radcliffe, are still a standard work. There are also the Grand United Order of Oddfellows and the National Independent Order of Oddfellows.

ODER, an important German river, rises in Moravia, and crossing the frontier flows NW. through Silesia, and N. through Brandenburg and Pomerania 550 m. into the Stettiner Haff and so to the Baltic. On its banks stand Rastlin, where navigation ends, Breslau, Frankfurt, and Stettin; it receives its chief tributary, the navigable Warthe, on the right, and has canal communication with the Spree and the Elbe.

ODESSA, on the Black Sea, 25 m. NE. of the mouth of the Dniester, is the fourth largest city of Russia, and the chief southern port and emporium of commerce. It exports large shipments of wheat, sugar and wool; imports cotton, groceries, iron, and coal, and manufactures flour, tobacco, machinery, and leather. It is well fortified, and though many of the poor live in mean hovels, is a fine city, with a university, a cathedral, and a public library. It was a free port from 1817 till 1857. The population includes many Greeks and Jews.

ODIN, or WODEN, the chief god of the ancient Scandinavians, combined in one the powers of Zeus and Ares among the Greeks, and was attended by two black ravens—Hugin, mind, and Munin, memory, the bearers of tidings between him and the people of his subject-world. His council chamber is in Asgard (q.v.), and he holds court with his warriors in Valhalla (q.v.). He is the source of all wisdom as well as all power, and is supposed by Carlyle to have been the delineation of some one who incarnated in himself all the characteristic wisdom and valour of the Scandinavian race; Frigg was his wife, and Balder and Thor his sons. See Carlyle's "Heroes."

ODO, bishop of Bayeux, brother of William the Conqueror, fought by his side at Hastings; after blessing the troops, was made Earl of Kent, and appointed governor of the kingdom during William's absence in Normandy; had great influence in State affairs all along, and set out for the Holy Land, but died at Palermo (1032-1096).

ODOACER, king of the Heruli, who overthrew the western empire of Rome, dethroned Augustulus, and became emperor himself; Zeno, the emperor of the East, enlisted Theodoric of the Ostrogoths against him, who made a treaty with him to be joint ruler of the kingdom of Italy, and assassinated him in 493.

O'DONNELL, LEOPOLD, Spanish soldier and politician, born, of Irish descent, in Santa Cruz, in Tenerife; entered the army, and attached himself to the cause of Queen Isabella, on whose emergence from her minority in 1843 he was made Governor of Cuba; there he enriched himself by trading in slaves, and returning to Spain threw himself into politics; he joined Espartero's cabinet in 1854, and two years later supplanted him as chief minister; he commanded in the Moorish war of 1858, and was created Duke of Tetuan after the capture of that city; he was again Prime Minister till 1866, and died in exile at Bayonne (1809-1867).

OXENSTERN, AXEL, COUNT, Swedish statesman, favourite minister of Gustavus Adolphus; supported him through the Thirty Years' War, though he disapproved of his engaging in it, and managed the affairs of the State with great ability after his death (1638-1654).

OXFORD, the county town of Oxfordshire, seat of one of the great English universities and of a bishopric; is on the left bank of the Thames, 52 m. W. of London; it is a city of great beauty, its many collegiate buildings and chapels and other institutions making it the richest of English cities in architectural interest; naturally historical associations abound; here the Mad Parliament met and adopted the Provisions of Oxford in 1258; Latimer and Ridley in 1555, and Cranmer in 1556, were burned in Broad Street; Charles I. made it his headquarters after the first year of the Civil War; it was the refuge of Parliament during the plague of 1665. Of recent years it has become a centre of the motor manufacturing industry.

OXFORD AND ASQUITH, HENRY HERBERT, 1ST EARL OF, British politician. Born in Morley, he lost his father when eight, was sent to the City of London School, and won a scholarship to Balliol, where he studied under Jowett and was President of the Union. He was called to the Bar in 1876, married Helen Melland in 1877, and, after her death, Margot Tennant in 1894. Entering Parliament in 1886 as a Gladstonian Liberal for East Fife, a seat he held till 1918, he was prominent as counsel in the Parnell Commission of 1899, and became Home Secretary in 1892. He declined the leadership of the party in 1899, took an Imperial line during the Boer War, and in 1905 was Chancellor of the Exchequer under Campbell-Bannerman, whom he succeeded as Prime Minister in 1908, for a period of office that saw the conflict with the House of Lords over the Parliament Act, the Ulster troubles, the suffragette campaign, and finally the outbreak of the Great War. In May, 1915, he invited leaders of other parties to join the Cabinet, and resigning in December took the leadership of the Independent Liberals. He lost his seat in 1918, but was returned for Paisley in 1922. With the fall of the Coalition he became leader of the reunited Liberal Party, and led his followers into the lobby last years were clouded by disputes on party policy and procedure (1852-1928).

OXFORD UNIVERSITY. Oxford is spoken of as a seat of learning as early as the 11th century. Cloistral schools existed before that. Schools of divinity, law, and topography were founded in the 12th century. In the 13th Dominican and Franciscan scholars raised it to a level only second to Paris, and by the end of the 14th century there were thousands of students in attendance. Oxford responded quickly to the Renaissance, and by the time of the Reformation 13 colleges were founded. Her Protestantism stood firm through Mary's reaction, sank into passive obedience under the Stuarts, but woke up to resist James II.'s Catholic propaganda. Thereafter followed a serious lapse in efficiency, but last century saw a complete revival. Oxford has now 21 colleges. It is rich in museums and libraries; the Bodleian Library is of great value, the Taylor Library is devoted to modern literature. The Oxford or Tractarian Movement, one of the most remarkable religious impulses of modern times, had its centre in the University between 1834 and 1845. Among distinguished Oxford alumni were Hooker, Jeremy Taylor, Wesley, Newman; Hobbes, Locke, Adam Smith; Johnson, Gibbon, Freeman, Green; Chatham, Gladstone; Ruskin; Shelley, Keble, Arnold, and Clough. Of the colleges of which the University consists, University was founded in 1249, Balliol in 1264, Merton in 1274, Exeter in 1314, Oriel in 1326, Queen's in 1340, New in 1386, Lincoln in 1427, All Souls' in 1437, Magdalen in 1458, Brasenose in 1509, Corpus in 1516, Christ Church in 1532, Trinity in 1554, St. John's in 1555, Jesus in 1571, Wadham in 1612, Pembroke in 1624, Worcester in 1714, Keble in 1870, and Hertford in 1874. St. Edmund's Hall, the sole academical hall remaining, dates from 1226.

PACIFIC OCEAN, the largest sheet of water on the globe, occupies a third of its whole surface, as much as all the land put together. It is a wide oval in shape, lying between Australia and Asia on the W., and North and South America on the E. Except from Asia it receives no large rivers. On its American shores the Gulf of California is the only considerable indentation; the Okhotsk, Japanese, Yellow, and Chinese Seas, on the Asiatic coast, are rather wide bays shut in by islands than inland seas. Its innumerable islands are the chief feature of the Pacific Ocean. The continental islands include the Aleutian, Kurile, Japan, and Philippine Islands, and the archipelago between the Malay Peninsula and Australia; the Oceanic Islands include countless groups, volcanic and coral, chiefly in the southern hemisphere, between the Sandwich Islands and New Zealand. Commerce on the Pacific Ocean increased vastly with the extension of the United States westward, the colonisation of Australia, and the opening of Chinese and Japanese ports. San Francisco and Valparaiso on the E., Hong-Kong and Sydney on the W., are the chief centres of trade; it received its name from Magellan.

PAMPLONA, or PAMPLONA, a fortified city of Northern Spain, is 80 m. due SE. of Bilbao. It has a Gothic cathedral and a surgical college, with manufactures of pottery and leather, and a trade in wine. Formerly capital of Navarre, it has suffered much in war.

PAMPERO, a strong south-westerly wind which blows off the pampas in the region of the river Plate, South America, usually accompanied by thunderstorms.

PAN, in the Greek mythology a goat-man, a personification of rude nature, and the protector of flocks and herds; originally an Arcadian deity, is represented as playing on a flute of reeds joined together of different lengths, called Pan's pipes, and dancing on his cloven hoofs over glades and mountains escorted by a bevy of nymphs side by side. There is a remarkable tradition that on the night of the Nativity at Bethlehem an astonished voyager heard a voice exclaiming as he passed the promontory of Tarentum, "The great Pan is dead." The modern devil is invested with some of his attributes, such as cloven hoofs, &c.

PANAMA, a free port in the State of Colombia, on the Pacific coast of the isthmus of the same name, and an oppressively hot and humid place; is the terminus of the Panama railroad and canal, and the seat of a great transit trade. It has a Spanish cathedral. The population, of Italian and negro descent chiefly, is only half what it was when the canal works were in full operation. Founded in 1518, the city was sacked and laid waste by the buccaner Morgan, 1671, the present city being rebuilt two years later.

PANAMA CANAL. Geographers were familiar with the idea of connecting the two oceans by a canal through Central America as early as the beginning of the 16th century, and Dutch plans are said to exist dating from the 17th century. The first practical steps were taken by Ferdinand de Lesseps in 1879; two years later work was begun; the cost was estimated at $24,000,000, but on January 1, 1899, the company was forced into liquidation after spending over $70,000,000, and accomplishing but a fifth of the work. Extravagance and incapacity were alleged among the causes of failure; but the apparently insurmountable difficulties were marshes, quicksands, and the overflow of the Chagres River, the prevalence of earthquakes, the length of the rainy season, the cost of labour and living, and the extreme unhealthiness of the climate. The effects of the French Panama Canal Company were bought by the United States of America for forty million dollars in 1902; Panama seceded from Colombia, which refused to ratify the treaty by which the territory on the line of the canal was conceded, and was at once recognised as independent by the United States; the strip of land is ten miles wide and the canal is fifty miles long, the channel being from 800 to 1000 ft. wide at the bottom; the excavation amounted to 220 million cubic yards; the cost was 460 million dollars; the first steamer passed through from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again on August 1, 1914.

PANATHENÆA, a festival, or rather two festivals, the Lesser and the Greater, anciently celebrated at Athens in honour of Athena, the patron-goddess of the city.

PAOLI, PASQUALE DE, a Corsican patriot; sought to achieve the independence of his country, but was defeated by the Genoese, aided by France, in 1768; took refuge in England, where he was well received and granted a pension; returned to Corsica and became lieutenant-general under the French republic, raised a fresh insurrection, had George III. proclaimed king, but failed to receive the viceroyalty, and returned to England, where he died a disappointed man (1726-1807).

PAPAL STATES, a territory in the N. of Italy extending irregularly from Naples to the Po, at one time subject to the temporal sovereignty of the Pope, originating in a gift to his Holiness from Pepin the Short, and taking shape as such about the 11th century, till in the 16th and 17th centuries the papal power began to assert itself in the general politics of Europe, and after being suppressed for a time by Napoleon it was formally abolished by annexation of the territory to the crown of Sardinia in 1870. In 1929 the Lateran Treaty revived the Papal States in a modified form, the Pope being granted sovereign power over a small area called the Vatican City (q.v.).

PAPHOS, the name of two ancient cities in the SW. of Cyprus; the older (now Kyklia) was a Paphnagian settlement, in which afterwards stood a temple of Venus, who was fabled to have sprung from the sea-foam close by; the other, 8 m. westward, was the scene of Paul's interview with Sergius Paulus and his encounter with Elymas.

PAPIAS, bishop of Hierapolis, in Phrygia, who flourished in the middle of the 2nd century, and wrote a book entitled "Exposition of the Lord's Sayings," fragments of which have been preserved by Eusebius and others; he was, it is said, the companion of Polycarp.

PAPIER-MÂCHÉ is a light, durable substance made from paper pulp or sheets of paper pasted together and variously treated with chemicals, heat, and pressure, largely used for ornamental trays, boxes, light furniture, &c., in which it is varnished and decorated to resemble lacquer-work, and for architectural decoration, in which it is made to imitate plaster moulding; the manufacture was learned from the Eastern nations, Persia, India, and Japan having been long familiar with it; America has adapted it to use for railroad wheels, &c.

PAPIN, DENIS, French physicist, born in Blois, practised medicine at Angers; came to England and assisted Boyle in his experiments, made a special study of the expansive power of steam and its motive power, invented a steam-digester with a safety-valve, since called after him, for cooking purposes at a high temperature; became professor of Mathematics at Marburg (1847-1712).

PAPINI, GIOVANNI, Italian writer. Born and educated in Florence, he edited several periodicals, and in 1921 produced a Life of Christ (1881-).

PAPINIANUS, EMILIUS, a celebrated Roman jurist; was put to death by Caracalla for refusing, it is said, when requested, to vindicate his conduct in murdering his brother (142-212).

PAPIRIUS, a Roman pontiff to whom is ascribed a collection of laws constituting the Roman code under the kings.

PAPPENHEIM, COUNT VON, Imperial general, born in Bavaria; played a prominent part in the Thirty Years' War; was distinguished for his seal as well as his successes on the Catholic side; was mortally wounded at Lützen, expressed his gratitude to God when he learned that Gustavus Adolphus, who fell in the same battle, had died before him (1594-1682).

PAPYRUS, the Greek name of the Egyptian papyrus, is a kind of sedge growing 10 ft. high, with a soft triangular stem, the pith of which is easily split into ribbons, found still in Egypt, Nubia, Abyssinia, &c.; the pith ribbons were the paper of the ancient Egyptians, of the Greeks after Alexander, and of the later Romans; they were used by the Arabs of the 8th century, and in Europe till the 12th; at first long strips were rolled up, but later rectangular pages were cut and bound together book fashion; though age has rendered the soft white pages brown and brittle, much ancient literature is still preserved on papyrus; the use of papyrus was superseded by that of parchment and rag-made paper.

PARÁ, a Brazilian port at the mouth of the Guama, on the E. shore of the Pará estuary, is a compact, regularly-built, thriving town, with whitewashed buildings, blue and white tiled roofs, tree-shaded streets; it has a cathedral; is the emporium of the Amazon trade, exporting indiarubber and cacao, and sending foreign goods into the interior; though hot, it is healthy.

PARABLE, a short allegorical narrative intended to illustrate and convey some spiritual instruction.

PARABOLA, a conic section formed by the intersection of a cone by a plane parallel to one of its generating lines; the path of a projectile thrown in the air at an angle with the vertical is a parabola.

PARACELSUS, a Swiss physician, alchemist, and mystic, whose real name was Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim, born in Einsiedeln, in Schwyz; was a violent revolutionary in the medical art, and provoked much hostility, so that he was driven to lead a wandering and unsettled life; notwithstanding, he contributed not a little, by his knowledge and practice, to inaugurate a more scientific study of nature (1493-1541).

PARAFFIN, or kerosene, the less volatile oil obtained from petroleum (q.v.) and used for burning in lamps; the name "paraffin" is given to a series of hydrocarbons, methane, ethane, propane, &c., some of which enter into the constitution of paraffin oil, petrol, &c.

PARAGUAY, except Uruguay the smallest State in South America, is an inland republic whose territories lie in the fork between the Pilcomayo and Paraguay and the Paraná Rivers, with Argentina on the W. and S., Bolivia on the N., and Brazil on the N. and E.; it is less than half the size of Spain, consists of rich undulating plains, and, in the S., of some of the most fertile land on the continent; the climate is temperate for the latitude; the population, Spanish, Indian, and half-caste, is Roman Catholic; the country is rich in natural products, but without minerals; dye-woods, rubber, Paraguay tea (a kind of holly), gums, fruits, wax, cochineal, and many medicinal herbs are gathered for export: maize, rice, cotton, and tobacco are cultivated; the industries include some tanning, brick-works, and lace-making; founded by Spain in 1535, Paraguay was the scene of an interesting experiment in the 17th century, when the country was governed wholly by the Jesuits, who, excluding all European settlers, built up a fabric of Christian civilisation; they were expelled in 1765; in 1810 the country joined the revolt against Spain, and was the first to establish its independence; for 26 years it was under the government of Dr. Francia; from 1865 to 1870 it maintained a heroic but disastrous war against the Argentine, Brazil, and Uruguay, as a consequence of which the population fell from a million and a half to a quarter of a million; it is again prosperous and progressing. The capital is Asunción, at the confluence of the Pilcomayo and Paraguay.

PARAGUAY RIVER, a South American river 1800 m. long, the chief tributary of the Paraná, rises in some lakes near Matto Grosso, Brazil, and flows southward through marshy country till it forms the boundary between Brazil and Bolivia, then, traversing Paraguay, it becomes the boundary between that State and the Argentine Republic, and finally enters the Paraná above Corrientes; it receives many affluents, and is navigable by ocean steamers almost to its source.

PARAKEITE, the Holy Spirit which Christ promised to His disciples would take His place as their teacher and guide after He left them. Also the name of the monastery founded by Abelard near Nogent-sur-Seine, of which Hilfoles (q.v.) was abbot.

PARALLAX, of a star is the angle subtended at the star by the radius of the earth's orbit; generally, it denotes the apparent change in the position of an object due to a change in the position of the observer.

PARALLELOGRAM, a quadrilateral with both pairs of opposite sides parallel.

PARAMARIBO, the capital of Dutch Guiana, on the Surinam, 10 m. from the sea, and the centre of the trade of the colony.

PARAMO, the name given to an elevated track of desert on the Andes.

PARANA RIVER, a great river of South America, formed by the confluence of the Rio Grande and the Paranáhyba, in S.E. Brazil, flows S.W. through Brazil and round the N.E. border of Paraguay, then, receiving the Paraguay River, turns S. through the Argentine, then E. till the junction of the Uruguay forms the estuary of the Plate. The river is broad and rapid, 2000 m. long, more than half of it navigable from the sea; at the confluence of the Yrassu it enters a narrow gorge, and for 100 m. forms one of the most remarkable rapids in the world; the chief towns on its banks are in the Argentine, viz. Corrientes, Santa Fé, and Rosario.

PARCE, the Roman name of the Three Fates (q.v.), derived from pars, a part, as apportioning to every individual his destiny.

PARCEL POST, the delivery of parcels up to 7 lbs. in weight by the Post Office, started in 1883; in 1927 a system of cash on delivery (C.O.D.) was instituted.

PARCLEMENT consists of skins specially prepared for writing on, and is so called from a king of Persians, who introduced it when the export of papyrus from Egypt was stopped; the skins used are of sheep, for fine parchment or vellum, of calves, goats, and lambs; parchment for drum-heads is made from calves' and asses' skins.

PARCS-AUX-CERFS, the French name for clearings to provide hunting fields for the French aristocracy prior to the Revolution.

PARÉ, AMBROISE, great French surgeon, born in Laval; was from the improved methods he introduced in the treatment of surgical cases entitled to be called, as he has been, the father of modern surgery; noted for his success as an operator, in particular the tying of divided arteries and the treatment of gunshot wounds; was appointed surgeon to Francis II., Charles IX., and Henry III. of France; his writings exercised a beneficent influence on the treatment of surgical cases in all lands (1517-1600).

PARIAH, a Hindu of the lowest class, and of no caste; pariahs are of various grades, but all are outcast, and treated as such; the name is applied strictly to Bhils, Santhals, and some other primitive tribes who do not profess Brahmanism.

PARIS, the capital of France, in the centre of the northern half of the country, on both banks of the Seine, and on two islands (La Cité and St. Louis) in the middle, 110 m. from the sea; is the largest city on the Continent, and one of the most beautiful in the world. No city has finer or gayier streets, or so many noble buildings. The Hôtel de Clugny, and the Hôtel de Sens are rare specimens of 15th-century civic architecture. The Palais de la Tuilerie, on the right bank of the Seine, dates from the 16th century, and was the royal residence till the Revolution. Connected with it is the Louvre, a series of galleries of painting, sculpture, and antiquities, whose contents form one of the richest collections existing and include the peerless "Venus de Milo." The Palais Royal encloses a large public garden, and consists of shops, restaurants, the Théâtre Français, and the Royal Palace of the Orleans family. South of the river is the Luxembourg, where the Senate meets, and on the Ile de la Cité stands the Palais de Justice and the Conciergerie, one of the oldest Paris prisons. St.-Germain-des-Prés is the most ancient church, but the most important is the cathedral of Notre Dame, 12th century, which might tell the whole history of France could it speak. Saint-Chapelle is said to be the finest Gothic masterpiece extant. The Panthéon, originally meant for a church, is the burial-place of the great men of the country, where lie the remains of Voltaire, Rousseau, and Carnot. The oldest hospitals are the Hôtel Dieu, La Charité, and La Pitié. The University Schools in the Quartier Latin attract the youth of all France; the chief are the Schools of Medicine and Law, the Scottish College, the College of France, and the Sorbonne, the seat of the faculties of letters, science, and Protestant theology. Triumphant arches are prominent in the city. There are many museums and charitable institutions: the Bibliothèque Nationale, in the Rue Richelieu, rivals the British Museum in numbers of books and manuscripts. The Palace of Industry and the Eiffel Tower commemorate the exhibitions of 1854 and 1889 respectively. Great market-places stand in various parts of the city. The Rue de Rivoli, Rue de la Paix, Rue du Faubourg St.-Honore, and the Rue Royale are among the chief streets; beautiful squares are numerous, the most noted being the Place de la Concorde, between the Champs-Élysées and the gardens of the Tuilleries, in the centre of which the Obelisk of Luxor stands on the site of the guillotine at which Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, Philippe Égalité, Danton, and Robespierre died. Boulevards lined with trees run to the outskirts of the city. The many roads, railways, canals, and rivers which converge on Paris have made it the most important trading centre in France, and the concourse of wealthy men of all nations has given it a high place in the financial world. It is a manufacturing city, producing jewellery, ornamental furniture, and all sorts of artistic "articles de Paris." The centre of French, and indeed European, fashion, it is noted for its pleasure and gaiety. The concentration of Government makes it the abode of countless officials. It is strongly fortified, being surrounded by a ring of forts, and a wall 22 m. long, at the gates of which the octroi duties are levied. The Prefect of the Seine, appointed by the Government, and advised by a large council, is the head of the municipality, of the police and fire brigades, cleansing, draining, and water-supply departments. The history of Paris is the history of France, for the national life has been, and is, in an extraordinary degree centred in the capital. It was the scene of the great tragic drama of the Revolution, and of the minor struggles of 1830 and 1848. In more recent times its great humiliation was its siege and capture by the Germans in 1870-1871.

PARIS, the second son of Priam and Hecuba; was exposed on Mount Ida at his birth; brought up by a shepherd; distinguished himself by his prowess, by which his parentage was revealed; married Énéas (q.v.); appealed to to decide to whom the "apple of discord" belonged, gave it to Aphrodite in preference to her two rivals Hera and Athena: was promised in return that he should receive the most beautiful woman in the world to wife, Helen of Sparta, whom he carried off to Greece, a deed which led to the Trojan War (q.v.): slew Achilles, and was mortally wounded by the poisoned arrows of Hercules.

PARIS, MATTHEW, English chronicler; a Benedictine monk of St. Albans; author of "Chronica Majora," which contains a history, written in Latin, of England from the Conquest to the year in which he died (1195-1299).

PARK, MUNGO, African traveller, born in Foulshie, near Selkirk; was apprenticed to a surgeon, and studied medicine at Edinburgh; 1791-1793 he spent in a voyage to Sumatra, and in 1795 went for the first time to Africa under the auspices of the African Association of London; starting from the Gambia, he penetrated eastward to the Niger, then westward to Kamalia, where illness seized him; conveyed to his starting-point by a slave-trader, he returned to England and published "Travels in the Interior of Africa," 1799; he married and settled to practice at Peebles, but he was not happy till in 1805 he set out for Africa again at Government expense; starting from Pisania, he reached the Niger, and sending back his journals attempted to descend the river in a canoe, but, attacked by natives, the canoe overturned, and he and his companions were drowned (1771-1806).

PARKER, SIR GILBERT, British novelist and politician. Born in Canada, he emigrated to Australia and then to London, where he made a name with novels dealing largely with life in Canada, "The Seats of the Mighty" and "The Weavers" being two of the best known. For 18 years he sat as M.P. for Gravesend, and he was knighted in 1902 (1882-).

PARKER, JOHN HENRY, archaeologist and writer on architecture; originally a London publisher, his chief work the "Archæology of Rome," in nine vols., a subject to which he devoted much study (1806-1884).

PARKER, JOSEPH, Nonconformist divine, born in Hexham; a popular minister of the City Temple; a vigorous and eloquent preacher, and the author of numerous works bearing upon Biblical theology and the defence of it; his magnum opus is the "People's Bible" (1830-1902).

PARKER, MATTHEW, archbishop of Canterbury, born in Norwich; was a Fellow of Cambridge; embraced the Protestant doctrines; became Master of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; was chaplain to Anne Boleyn, and made Dean of Ely by Edward VI.; was deprived of his offices under Mary, but made Primate under Elizabeth, and the Bishop's Bible was translated and issued under his auspices (1504-1575).

PARKER, THEODORE, an American preacher and lecturer; adopted and professed the Unitarian creed, but discarded it, like Emerson, for one still more liberal; distinguished himself in the propagation of it by his lectures as well as his writings; was a vigorous anti-slavery agitator, and in general a champion of freedom; died at Florence while on a tour for his health (1810-1860).

PARKMAN, FRANCIS, American historian, born in Boston; his writings valuable, particularly in their bearing on the dominion of the French in America, its rise, decline, and fall (1823-1893).

PARLEMENT, the name given to the local courts of justice in France prior to the Revolution, in which the edicts of the king required to be registered before they became laws; given by pre-eminence to the one in Paris, which was composed of lawyers, or gentlemen of the long robe, as they were called, whose action the rest uniformly endorsed, and which played an important part on the eve of the Revolution, and contributed to further the outbreak of it, to its own dissolution in the end.

PARLIAMENT is the name of the great legislative council of Britain representing the three estates of the realm—Clergy, Lords, and Commons. The Clergy are represented in the Upper House by the archbishops and 24 bishops, of whom London, Winchester, and Durham are always three, the remainder sitting according to seniority of consecration; the rest of the Upper House comprises the dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons of the peerage of Great Britain who sit in virtue of their titles, and representatives of the Scottish and Irish peerages elected for life; the total membership is over 700; the House of Lords may initiate any bill not a money bill; it does not deal with financial measures at all except to give its formal assent; it also revises bills passed by the Commons, and may reject these within limits. Of late years this veto has come to be exercised only in cases where it seems likely that the Commons do not retain the confidence of the people, having thus the effect of referring the question for the decision of the constituencies. The Lords constitute the final court of appeal in all legal questions, but in exercising this function only those who hold or have held high judicial office take part. The House of Commons comprises 615 representatives of the people; its members represent counties, divisions of counties, burghs, wards of burghs, and universities, and are elected by the entire adult population, male and female, over 21. The Commons initiates most of the legislation, deals with bills already initiated and passed by the Lords, inquires into all matters of public concern, discusses and determines imperial questions, and exercises the sole right to vote supplies of money. To become law bills must pass the successive stages of first and second reading, committee, and third reading in both Houses, and receive the assent of the sovereign, which has not been refused for two centuries.

PARLIAMENT ACT, a law passed in August, 1911, aimed chiefly at decreasing the power of the House of Lords. Under it the Lords cannot reject or amend a money Bill, and cannot touch a measure passed three times by the House of Commons; the life of the House of Commons under the Act was reduced from seven to five years. The Act only passed the House of Lords after Asquith had threatened to create enough new peers to secure a majority for it, and its passing ended a constitutional crisis that had begun with the rejection by the House of Lords of the 1909 Budget.

PARLIAMENT, THE LONG, the name given to the last English Parliament convoked by Charles I. in 1640, dissolved by Cromwell in 1653, and recalled twice after the death of the Protector before it finally gave up the ghost.

PARLIAMENT OF DUNCES, name given by Sir E. Coke to a parliament held at Coventry by Henry IV. in 1494, because no lawyer was allowed to sit in it.

PARLIAMENTARIAN, one who, in the English Civil War, supported the cause of the Parliament against the king.

PARMA, a cathedral and university town in N. Italy, on the Parma, a tributary of the Po, 70 m. N.E. of Genoa; is rich in art treasures, has a school of music, picture-gallery, and museum of antiquities; it manufactures pianofortes, silks, and woollens, and has a cattle and grain market; Parma was formerly the capital of the duchy of that name, which was united to Italy in 1860; it was the residence of Correggio, as well as the birthplace of Parmigiano.

PARMENIDES, a distinguished Greek philosopher of the Eleatic school, who flourished in the 5th century B.C.; his system was developed by him in the form of an epic poem, in which he demonstrates the existence of an Absolute which is unthinkable, because it is without limits, and which he identifies with thought, as the one in the many.

PARMENTON, an able and much-esteemed Macedonian general, distinguished as second in command at Granicus, Issus, and Arbela, but whom Alexander at some fit of jealousy and under unfounded suspicion caused to be assassinated in Media.

PARMIGIANO, a Lombard painter whose proper name was Francesco Mazzuoli, born in Parma; went to Rome when 19 and obtained the patronage of Clement VII.; after the storming of the city in 1527, during which he sat at work in his studio, he went to Bologna, and four years later returned to his native city; failing to implement a contract to paint frescoes he was imprisoned, and on his release retired to Casalmaggiore, where he died; in style he followed Correggio, and is best known by his "Cupid Shaping a Bow" (1504-1540).

PARNASSUS, a mountain in Phocis, 10 m. N. of the Gulf of Corinth, 8000 ft. high, one of the chief seats of Apollo and the Muses, and an inspiring source of poetry and song, with the oracle of Delphi and the Castalian spring on its slopes; it was conceived of by the Greeks as in the centre of the earth.

PARNELL, CHARLES STEWART, Irish Home Ruler, born in Avondale, in Wicklow; he was of land-owner parents and was educated at Cambridge. He entered Parliament in 1875 as a Home Ruler, and led his party in obstructionist methods; he also founded the Land League. Public opinion holding him responsible for crimes in Ireland, and especially the Phoenix Park murder, a Royal Commission sat on "Parnellism and Crime," and proved that an incriminating letter attributed to him was a forgery. Cited as co-respondent in the O'Shea divorce case when at the height of his power, he retired from the leadership of the party at the command of Gladstone, and died a few months later (1846-1891).

PARNELL, THOMAS, English minor poet of the Queen Anne period, born in Dublin, of a Cheshire family; studied at Trinity College, took orders, and became archdeacon of Clogher; is best known as the author of "The Hermit," though his odes "The Night-Piece on Death" and the "Hymn to Contentment" are of more poetic worth; he was the friend of Swift and Pope (1679-1718).

PAROS, one of the Cyclades, lying between Naxos and Siphanto, exports wine, figs, and wool; in a quarry near the summit of Mount St. Elias the famous Parian marble is still cut; the capital is Paros.

PARR, CATHERINE, sixth wife of Henry VIII., daughter of Sir Thomas Parr of Kendal, was a woman of learning and great discretion, acquired considerable power over the king, persuaded him to consent to the succession of his daughters, and, surviving him, married her former suitor, Sir Thomas Seymour, and died from the effects of childbirth the year after (1512-1548).

PARR, SAMUEL, a famous classical scholar, born in Harrow; became headmaster of first Colchester and then Norwich Grammar School and a prebend of St. Paul's; he had an extraordinary memory and was a great talker; he was a good Latinist, but nothing he has left justifies the high repute in which he was held by his contemporaries (1747-1825).

PARR, THOMAS, called OLD PARR, a man notable for his long life, being said to have lived 152 years and 9 months, from 1488 to 1640; he was a farmer at a town near Shrewsbury.

PARRAMATTA, next to Sydney, from which it is 14 m. W., the oldest town in New South Wales; manufactures colonial tweeds and Parramatta cloths, and is in the centre of orange groves and fruit gardens.

PARRHASIUS, a gifted painter of ancient Greece of the 5th century B.C., born in Ephesus; came to Athens and became the rival of Zeuxis; he was the contemporary of Socrates and a man of an arrogant temper; his works were characterised by the pains bestowed on them.

PARRY, SIR HUBERT HASTINGS, British composer. He was a professor at Oxford and Director of the Royal College of Music, and composed a number of works, chiefly cantatas and odes; he also wrote several books on music (1848-1918).

PARRY, SIR WILLIAM EDWARD, celebrated Arctic explorer, born in Bath; visited the Arctic Seas under Ross in 1818, conducted a second expedition himself in 1819-1820, a third in 1821-1823, a fourth in 1824-1826 with unequal success, and a fifth in 1827 in quest of the North Pole via Spitzbergen, in which he was baffled by an adverse current; received sundry honours for his achievements; died governor of Greenwich Hospital, and left several accounts of his voyages (1790-1855).

PARSEC, an astronomical unit of distance; the distance of a star of parallax one second, i.e. 34 light-years or 19 million million miles.

PARSES (i.e. inhabitants of Pars, a province of Persia), a name given to the disciples of Zoroaster or their descendants in Persia and India, and sometimes called Guebres; in India they number some 90,000, are to be found chiefly in the Bombay Presidency, form a wealthy community, and are engaged mostly in commerce; in religion they incline to deism, and pay homage to the sun as the symbol of the deity; they neither bury their dead nor burn them, but expose them apart in the open air in "towers of silence," where they are left till the flesh is eaten away and only the bones remain, to be removed afterwards for consignment to a subterranean cavern.

PARSIFAL, or PARZIVAL, the hero of the legend of the Holy Grail (q.v.), and identified with Galahad (q.v.) in the Arthurian legend.

PARSON ADAMS, a simple-minded 18th-century clergyman in Fielding's "Joseph Andrews."

PARSONS, SIR CHARLES, British engineer, inventor of the steam turbine engine; chairman of engineering works at Newcastle; president of the British Association at Bournemouth in 1919; awarded the Order of Merit, 1927 (1854-).

PARSONS, ROBERT, English Jesuit, born in Somersetshire, educated at Oxford and a Fellow of Balliol College; he became a convert to Roman Catholicism and entered the Society of Jesus in 1575; conceived the idea of reclaiming England from her Protestant apostasy, and embarked on the enterprise in 1580, but found it too hot for him, and had to escape to the Continent; after this he busied himself partly in intrigues to force England into submission and partly in organising seminaries abroad for English Roman Catholics, becoming head of one at Rome, where he died; he appears to have been a Jesuit to the backbone, and to have served the cause of Jesuitry with his whole soul (1546-1610).

PARTHENOGENESIS, name given to asexual reproduction, that is, to reproduction of plants or animals by means of unimpregnated germs or ova.

PARTHENON, a celebrated temple of the Doric order at Athens, dedicated to Athena, constructed under the leadership of the architect Ictinus, and regarded as the finest specimen of Greek architecture that exists; it is 228 ft. in length and 65 ft. in height. Parthenon means the chamber of the maiden goddess, that is, Athena.

PARTHENOPE, in the Greek mythology one of the three Sirens (q.v.), who threw herself into the sea because her love for Ulysses was not returned, and was drowned; her body was washed ashore at Naples, which was called Parthenope after her name.

PARTHIA, an ancient country corresponding to Northern Persia; was inhabited by a people of Scythian origin, who adopted the Aryan speech and manners, and subsequently yielded much to Greek influence; after being tributary successively to Assyria, Media, Persia, Alexander the Great, and Syria, they set up an independent kingdom in 250 B.C. In two great contests with Rome they made the empire respect their prowess; between 53 and 36 B.C. they defeated Crassus in Mesopotamia, conquered Syria and Palestine, and inflicted disaster on Mark Antony in Armenia; the renewal of hostilities by Trajan in A.D. 115 brought more varied fortunes, but they extorted a tribute of 50,000,000 denarii from the Emperor Marcus in 218. Ctesiphon was their capital; the Euphrates lay between them and Rome; they were overthrown by Artabazir of Persia in 224. The Parthians were famous horse-archers, and in retreat shot their arrows backwards often with deadly effect on a pursuing enemy.

PARTICK, a western suburb of Glasgow, has numerous villas, and its working population is very largely engaged in shipbuilding.

PARTINGTON, MRS., an imaginary lady, the creation of the American humorist Shillaber, distinguished for her misuse of learned words; also another celebrity, cited by Sydney Smith in a speech, who attempted to sweep back the Atlantic with her mop, the type of those who think to stave back the inevitable.

PASCAL, BLAISE, illustrious French thinker and writer, born in Clermont, in Auvergne; was distinguished at once as a mathematician, a physicist, and a philosopher; at 16 wrote a treatise on conic sections, which astonished Descartes; at 18 invented a calculating machine; he afterwards made experiments in pneumatics and hydrostatics, by which his name became associated with those of Torricelli and Boyle; an accident which befell him turned his thoughts to religious subjects, and in 1654 he retired to the convent of Port Royal (q.v.), where he spent as an ascetic the rest of his days, and wrote his celebrated "Provincial Letters" in defence of the Jansenists against the Jesuits, and his no less famous "Pensées," which were published after his death: "his great weapon in polemics," says Prof. Saintsbury, "is polite irony, which he first brought to perfection, and in the use of which he has hardly been equalled, and has certainly not been surpassed since" (1623-1662).

PAS-DE-CALAIS, the French name for the Strait of Dover; also the name of the adjacent department of France.

PASHA, a Turkish title, originally bestowed on princes of the blood, but extended to governors of provinces and prominent officers in the army and navy.

PASIPHAE, the wife of Minos (q.v.) and mother of the Minotaur (q.v.).

PASKEVITCH, IVAN FEODOBOVITCH, a Russian general, born in Poltava; took part in repelling the French in 1812, defeated the Persians in 1826-1827 and the Turks in 1828-1829; suppressed a Polish insurrection in 1831 and a Magyar revolution in 1849; was wounded at Silistria in 1854 and resigned (1782-1856).

PASQUINO, a cobbler or tailor who lived in Rome at the end of the 15th century, notable for his witty and sarcastic sayings, near whose shop after his death a fragment of a statue was dug up and named after him, on which, as representing him, the Roman populace claim to this day, it would seem, the privilege of placarding flies against particularly the ecclesiastical authorities of the place, hence Pasquinade.

PASSAU, a Bavarian fortified town on the Austrian frontier, situated at the confluence of the Inn and the Danube, 105 m. E. of Munich by rail; is a picturesque place, strategically important, with manufactures of leather, porcelain, and parquet, and trade in salt and corn.

PASSFIELD, 1ST BARON (Sidney Webb), British politician. Born in London, he married Beatrice Potter in 1892, and after a civil service career he became known together with his wife as a writer on economics and particularly as an authority on trade unionism. In 1922 he became Labour M.P. for Seaham, resigning his seat in 1929 to take a peerage and become Dominions Secretary (1859-).

PASSING-BELL, a bell tolled at the moment of the death of a person to invite his neighbours to pray for the safe passing of his soul.

PASSION PLAY, a dramatic representation of the several stages in the passion of Christ, a popular performance among the peasantry of Germany in the Middle Ages, of which that still held at Oberammergau, in Bavaria, is a survival.

PASSION SUNDAY, the fifth Sunday in Lent, which is succeeded by what is called the Passion Week.

PASSION WEEK is properly the week preceding Holy Week, but in common English usage the name is given to Holy Week itself, i.e. to the week immediately preceding Easter, commemorating Christ's passion.

PASSIONISTS, an order of priests, called of the Holy Cross, founded in 1694 by Paul Francisco, of the Cross in Bardina, whose mission it is to preach the Passion of Christ and bear witness to its spirit and import, and who have established themselves in Europe and America; they are noted for their

the chief festival of the Jews in commemoration of the passing of the destroying angel over the houses of the Israelites on the night when he slew the first-born of the Egyptians; it was celebrated in April, lasted eight days, only unleavened bread was used in its observance, and a lamb roasted whole was eaten with bitter herbs, the partakers standing and road-ready as on their departure from the land of bondage. According to some authorities the custom is of greater antiquity and commemorates the offering of firstlings of the flock (see Exodus xiii).

PASSOW, FRANZ, German philologist, born in Mecklenburg, professor at Breslau; his chief work "Hand-Wörterbuch der Griechischen Sprache"; an authority in subsequent Greek lexicography (1786-1853).

PASSPORTS, identity papers which have to be shown on crossing a national frontier. In Great Britain a fee of 7s. 6d. is charged for a passport, which is issued by the Foreign Office through the Passport Office. For a few countries, and their nationals visiting Britain, a visa is also required, for which extra is charged.

PASTA, JUDITH, a famous Italian operatic singer, born near Milan, of Jewish birth; her celebrity lasted from 1822 to 1835, after which she retired into private life; she had a voice of great compass (1798-1865).

PASTEUR, LOUIS, an eminent French chemist, born in Dôle, in dep. of Jura, celebrated for his studies and discoveries in fermentation, and also for his researches in hydrophobia and his suggestion of inoculation as a cure; the Pasteur Institute in Paris was the scene of his researches from 1886 (1822-1895).

PASTON LETTERS, a series of letters and papers, over a thousand in number, belonging to a Norfolk family of the name, and published by Sir John Fenn over a century ago; they date from the reign of Henry V. to the close of the reign of Henry VII., and are of importance in connection with the political and social history of the period.

PASTORAL STAFF, a bishop's staff with a crooked head, symbolical of his authority and function as a shepherd in spiritual matters of the souls in his diocese.

PATAGONIA is the territory at the extreme S. of South America, lying between the Rio Colorado and the Strait of Magellan. Chilian Patagonia is a narrow strip W. of the Andes, with a broken coast-line, many rocky islands and peninsulas. Its climate is temperate but very rainy, and much of it is covered with dense forests which yield valuable timber; coal is found at Punta Arenas on the Strait. The population consists chiefly of migratory Araucanian Indians and the Chilian settlers at Punta Arenas. Eastern or Argentine Patagonia is an extensive stretch of undulating plateaux intersected by ravines, swept by cold W. winds, and rainless for eight months of the year. The base of the Andes is fertile and forest-clad, the river valleys can be cultivated, but most of the plains are covered with coarse grass or sparse scrub, and there are some utterly desolate regions. Lagoons abound, and there are many rivers running eastward from the Andes. Herds of horses and cattle are bred on the pampas. The Indians of this region are among the tallest races of the world.

PATANJALI is the name of two ancient Indian authors, of whom one is the author of the "Yoga," a theistic system of philosophy, and the other of a criticism on the Sanskrit grammarian Pāṇini.

PATCHOULI, a perfume with a strong odour, derived from the dried roots of an Indian plant introduced into the country in 1844.

PATENTS, rights granted to an individual or company with protection against imitation or reproduction. The right was first granted to printing in 1591 and was extended to inventions in 1628.

PATER, WALTER HORATIO, an English prose-writer and critic, specially studious of word, phrase, and style, born in London; studied at Oxford, and became a Fellow of Brasenose College; lived chiefly in London; wrote studies in the "History of the Renaissance," "Marcus the Epicurean," "Imaginary Portraits," "Appreciations," together with an essay on "Style"; literary criticism was his forte (1839-1894).

PATERCULUS, GAUL VELLEIUS, a Latin historian of the 1st century, author of an epitome, especially of Roman history, rather disfigured by undue flattery of Tiberius, his patron, as well as of Caesar and Augustus.

PATERSON, ROBERT, the original of Scott's "Old Mortality," a stone-mason, born near Hawick; devoted 40 years of his life to restoring and erecting monumental stones to the memory of the Scottish Covenanters (1712-1801).

PATERSON, WILLIAM, a famous financier, born in Thirlwald parish, Dumfriesshire; originated the Bank of England, projected the ill-fated Darien scheme, and lost all in the venture, though he recovered compensation afterwards, an indemnity for his losses of £18,000; he was a long-headed Scot, skilful in finance and in matters of trade (1658-1719).

PATHOS, the name given to an expression of deep feeling, and calculated to excite similar feelings in others.

PATLOCK, ROBERT, English novelist, author of "Peter Wilkins," an exquisite production, of which the heroine was the flying girl Youwarkee (1697-1767).

PATMORE, COVENTRY, English poet, born in Essex, best known as the author of "The Angel in the House," a poem in praise of domestic bliss, succeeded by others, superior in some respects, of which "The Unknown Kross," is by many much admired; he was a Roman Catholic by religious profession (1823-1896).

PATMOS, a barren rocky island in the Ægean Sea, S. of Samos, 28 m. in circuit, where St. John suffered exile, and where it is said he wrote the Apocalypse.

PATNA, the seventh city of India, in Bengal, at the junction of the Son, the Gandak, and the Ganges; is admirably situated for commerce; has excellent railway communication, and trades largely in cotton, oil-seeds, and salt. It is a poor city with narrow streets, and except for the Government buildings, Patna College, a Roman Catholic cathedral, and a mosque, has scarcely any good buildings. At Dinapur, its military station, 6 m. to the W., mutiny broke out in 1857. It is famous for its rice, but this is largely a re-export.

PATOIS, a name the French give to a corrupt dialect of a language spoken in a remote province of a country.

PATON, SIR JOSEPH NOEL, poet and painter, born in Dumfries; became a pattern designer, but afterwards studied in Edinburgh and London, and devoted himself to art; his early subjects were mythical and legendary, later they were chiefly religious; he was appointed Queen's Limner for Scotland in 1865, and knighted in 1867; his "Quarrel" and "Reconciliation of Oberon and Titania" are in the National Gallery, Edinburgh; the illustrations of the "Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," and the series of religious allegories, "Pursuit of Pleasure," "Lux in Tenebris," "Faith and Reason," &c., are familiar through engravings; "Poems by a Painter" appeared in 1861 (1821-1902).

PATRAS, on the NW. corner of the Morean Peninsula, on the shores of the Gulf of Patras; has a fine harbour; is the chief western port of Greece, shipping currants, olive-oil, and wine, and importing textiles, machinery, and coal; it is a handsome city, rebuilt and fortified last century.

PATRIARCH, in Church history is the name given originally to the bishops of Rome, Antioch, and Alexandria, and later to those also of Constantinople and Jerusalem, who held a higher rank than other bishops, and exercised a certain authority over the bishops in their districts. The title is in vogue in the Greek, Syrian, Armenian, and other Churches. It was actually first given to the chief of a race or clan, the members of which were called after him.

PATRICIANS AND PLEBEIANS, the two classes into which, from the earliest times, the population of the Roman State was divided, the former of which possessed rights and privileges not conceded to the latter, and stood to them as patrons to clients, like the baron of the Middle Ages to the vassals. This inequality gave rise to repeated and often protracted struggles in the commonalty, during which the latter gradually encroached on the rights of the former till the barrier in civic status, and even in social to some extent, was as good as abolished, and members of the plebeian class were eligible to the highest offices and dignities of the State.

PATRICK, ORDER OF ST. See ST. PATRICK, ORDER OF.

PATRICK, ST., the apostle and patron saint of Ireland; his birthplace uncertain; flourished in the 5th century; his mission, which extended over great part of Ireland, and over thirty or forty years of time, was eminently successful, and at the end of it he was buried in Downpatrick, henceforth a spot regarded as a sacred one. Various miracles are ascribed to him, and among the number the extirpation from the soil of all venomous reptiles (cirr. 373-463).

PATRICK, SIMON, English prelate; distinguished himself, when he was rector of St. Paul's, by his self-denying devotion during the Plague of London; became bishop in succession of Chichester and Ely, and was the author of a number of expostory works (1626-1707).

PATRISTIC LITERATURE, the name given to the writings of the early Fathers of the Christian Church.

PATROCLUS, a friend of Achilles, who accompanied him to the Trojan War, and whose death by the hand of Hector roused Achilles out of his sullenness, and provoked him to avenge the deed in the death of Hector.

PATTESON, JOHN COLERIDGE, bishop of Melanesia, grand-nephew of Coleridge; a devoted bishop, in material things no less than spiritual, among the Melanesian Islanders; was murdered, presumably through mistake, by the natives of one of the Santa Cruz groups (1827-1871).

PATTE, ADELINA, prima donna, born in Madrid, of Italian extraction; made her first appearance at New York in 1859, and in London at Covent Garden, as Amina in "La Sonnambula," in 1861, and appeared in all European capitals, with several tours in America; was married three times, her last husband being Baron Cederström, and lived at Craig-y-nos Castle, near Swansea, Wales (1843-1920).

PATTISON, MARK, a distinguished English scholar, born in Hornby, Yorkshire; studied at Oxford, and was for a time carried away with the Tractarian Movement, but when his interest in it died out he gave himself to literature and philosophy; wrote in the famous "Essays and Reviews" a paper on "The Tendency of Religious Thought in England"; became rector of Lincoln College, Oxford; wrote his chief literary work, a "Life of Isaac Casaubon," a mere fragment of what it lay in him to do, and left an autobiography (1813-1884).

PATTISON'S PROCESS, the name of a process for desilvering lead, dependent on the fact that lead which has least silver in it solidifies first on liquefaction.

PAU, chief town of the French province of Basses-Pyrénées, on the Gave de Pau, 60 m. E. of Bayonne; is situated amid magnificent mountain scenery, and is a favourite winter resort for the English; linen and chocolate are manufactured; it was the capital of Navarre, and has a historic castle; it stands on the edge of a high plateau, and commands a majestic view of the Pyrénées on the S.

PAU, PAUL MARIE CÉSAR GERALD, French general, fought in the Franco-Prussian war, in which he lost an arm; early in the Great War he directed operations in Alsace (1848-).

PAULLAC, a port for Bordeaux, on the left bank of the Gironde.

PAUL, the name of five Popes; Paul I., Pope from 757 to 797; Paul II., Pope from 1464 to 1471; Paul III., Pope from 1534 to 1549, was zealous against the Protestant cause, excommunicated Henry VIII. in 1538, sanctioned the Jesuit order in 1540, convened and convoked the Council of Trent in 1545; Paul IV., Pope from 1555 to 1559, originally an ascetic, was zealous for the best interests of the Church and public morality, established the Inquisition at Rome, and issued the first Index Expurgatorius; Paul V., Pope from 1605 to 1621, his pontificate distinguished by protracted strife with the Venetian republic, arising out of the claim of the clergy for immunity from the civil tribunals, which was brought to an end through the intervention of Henry IV. of France in 1607; he was zealous for orthodoxy, like his predecessors. PAUL, ST., originally called Saul, the great Apostle of the Gentiles, born in Tarsus, in Cilicia, by birth a Jew and a Roman citizen; trained to severity by Gamaliel at Jerusalem in the Jewish faith, and for a time the bitter persecutor of the Christians, till, on his way to Damascus, in the prosecution of his hostile purposes, the overpowering conviction flashed upon him that he was fighting against the cause that, as a Jew, he should have embraced, and which he was at once smitten with zeal to further, as the one cause on which hinged the salvation, not of the Jews only, but of the whole world. He did more for the extension and the exposition of the Christian faith at its first promulgation than any of the Apostles, and perhaps all of them together, and it is questionable if but for him it would have become, as it has become, the professed religion of the most civilised section of the world. After his conversion on the road to Damascus he made three missionary journeys to Asia Minor and Greece. Returning to Jerusalem, he was arrested, appealed as a Roman citizen to Caesar, and was sent to Rome, where he waited trial two years, during which time he wrote some of his Epistles. There is some evidence in these that he was released after a first trial, re-arrested, and condemned to death at a second, tradition declaring that he was executed at Three Fountains outside the city.

PAUL I. Czar of Russia, son of the Empress Catharine II., and her successor in 1796; was a despotic and arbitrary ruler; fought with the allies against France, but entered into an alliance with Napoleon in 1799; was murdered by certain of his nobles as he was being forced to abdicate (1754-1801).

PAUL AND VIRGINIA, a celebrated novel by Saint-Pierre, written on the eve of the French Revolution; it records the fate of a child of nature corrupted by the false, artificial sentimentality that prevailed at the time among the upper classes of France.

PAUL SAMOSATA, so called as born in Samosata, on the Euphrates, a heresiarch who denied the doctrine of three persons in one God, was bishop of Antioch, under the sway of Zoroaster, but deposed on her defeat by Aurelian in 274.

PAULDING, JAMES KIRKE, American writer, born in New York State; author of "History of John Bull and Brother Jonathan," the novel "The Dutchman's Fireside," and a Life of Washington (1779-1860).

PAULL, REINHOLD, German historian of England, born in Berlin; studied much in England, and became professor of History at Göttingen; wrote "Life of King Alfred," "History of England from the Accession of Henry II. to the Death of Henry VII.," "Pictures of Old England," and "Simon de Montfort" (1823-1882).

PAULICIAN, a heretical sect founded by Constantine of Mananalis about A.D. 660 in Armenia, and persisting in spite of severe persecution, were transferred to Thrace in 970, where remnants were found as late as the 13th century; they held that an evil spirit was the creator and god of this world, and that God was the ruler of the next; they refused to ascribe divinity to Christ, to worship Mary, to reverence the cross, or observe the sacraments of Baptism and Eucharist; their name was derived from the special regard in which they held the writings of St. Paul, from which they professed to derive their tenets; they were charged with Manichæism, but indignantly repudiated the imputation.

PAULINUS, the first archbishop of York, sent in company with Augustin from Rome by Gregory to Britain in 601; laboured partly in Kent and partly in Northumbria, and persuaded Edwin of Northumbria to embrace Christianity in 625; d. 644.

PAULUS, HEINRICH, one of the founders of German nationalism, born near Stuttgart; held in succession sundry professorships; denied the miraculous in the Scripture history, and invented ingenious rational explanations, now out of date (1761-1851).

PAUSANIAS, a famous Spartan general, the nephew of Leonidas, who, as commander-in-chief of the Greeks, overthrew the Persian army under Mardonius at Plataea in 479, but who, elated by this and other successes, aimed at the sovereignty of Greece by alliance with Xerxes, and being discovered took refuge in a temple at Athens, where he was blockaded and starved to death in 471 B.C., his mother throwing the first stone of the pile that was cast up to bar his exit.

PAUSANIAS, a Greek traveller and topographer, lived during the reigns of Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius; wrote an "Itinerary of Greece" in 10 books, the fruit of his own peregrinations, full of descriptions of great value both to the historian and the antiquary.

PAVIA, on the Ticino, in Lombardy, is an imposing "city of a hundred towers," with little industry or commerce; in its unfinished cathedral St. Augustine was buried; San Michele, where the early kings of Italy were crowned, dates from the 7th century; the University was founded by Charlemagne, and has now attached to it colleges for poor students, a library, museum, botanic garden, and school of art; stormed by Napoleon in 1796, Pavia was in Austrian possession from 1814 till its inclusion in the kingdom of Italy, 1859.

PAWNEES, a once numerous and powerful North American Indian tribe which inhabited Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas.

PAXTON, SIR JOSEPH, architect of the Crystal Palace, born in Bedfordshire, was originally a gardener in the service of the Duke of Devonshire, and promoted to the charge of the duke's gardens at Chatsworth, where he displayed the architectural ability in building large glass conservatories which developed itself in the construction of the Great Exhibition of 1851, for which he received the honour of knighthood (1801-1865).

PAYN, JAMES, English novelist, born in Cheltenham; edited Chambers's Journal and Cornhill Magazine; his novels were numerous and of average quality, "Lost Sir Masingberd" and "By Proxy" among the most successful (1830-1898).

PAYNE, JOHN HOWARD, actor and playwright, born in New York; resided in London from 1818 to 1832; most of his days a stranger in a strange land, he immortalised himself as the author of "Home, Sweet Home," a song which was included in his play "Clari, the Maid of Milan" (1823); his remains were disinterred and buried at home 30 years after his death at Tunia (1791-1852).

PEABODY, GEORGE, philanthropist, born in Danvers, now Peabody, in Massachusetts, U.S.; made a large fortune as a dry-goods merchant in Baltimore and as a stockbroker as well in London; gave away for benevolent purposes in his lifetime a million and a half of money, and left to his relatives one million more; died in London; his body was laid beside his mother's at South Danvers, U.S. (1795-1869).

PEACE PACT. See KELLOGG PACT.

PEACOCK, THOMAS LOVE, English novelist, born in Weymouth; was pretty much a self-taught scholar, and no mean one, as his literary activity over half a century abundantly showed; held a post in the India House, his predecessor being James Mill and his successor John Stuart Mill; was an intimate friend of Shelley, and the father-in-law of George Meredith; he made his first literary appearance as a poet in two small volumes of poems, and his first novel was "Headlong Hall" as his latest was "Gryll Grange," all of them written in a vein of conventional satire, and more conspicuous for wit than humour; Thackeray owed not a little to him, little as the generality did, he being "too learned for a shallow age" (1785-1866).

PEARSON, JOHN, English prelate, born in Norfolk; held a succession of preferments in the Church, and in the end the bishopric of Chester; author of a very learned work, "Exposition of the Creed," of which Bentley said, "its very dross is gold" (1613-1686).

PEARSON, KARL, British scientist, professor at London University, famous for his work on heredity from the statistical point of view; wrote on evolution and eugenics (1857-).

PEARY, ROBERT EDWIN, American rear-admiral and explorer. He made his first Arctic voyage in 1891, and followed it with others in 1893, 1895, and 1898. In 1902 he reached nearer the Pole than any one had before, and after another expedition in 1906 succeeded in 1909 in reaching the North Pole, the first man to achieve the feat. He wrote several books on exploration (1854-1920).

PEASANT WAR, or Bauernkrieg, revolt of the peasantry in the S. and W. of Germany against the oppression and cruelty of the nobles and clergy which broke out at different times from 1500 to 1525, and which, resulting in their defeat, rendered their lot harder than before. The cause of the Reformation, held answerable for the movement, suffered damage as well, but indeed the excesses of the insurgents were calculated to provoke the retribution that was meted out to them.

PECHILLI GULF OF, a great land-locked bay opening in the NW. of the Yellow Sea, receives the waters of the Hoang-ho, and on opposite tongues of land, at the mouth of it stand Port Arthur and Weihai-Wai.

PECKHAM, a pronounced hypocrite in Dickens' "Martin Chuzzlewit," who lies and talks cant whether he is drunk or sober.

PECOCK, REGINALD, bishop in succession of St. Asaph and Chichester, born in Wales; the author of, among other works, the "Repressor of Over Much Blaming of the Clergy" and the "Book of Faith"; he wrote on behalf of the Church against Lollards, but he offended Churchmen as well as the latter—Churchmen because he agreed with the Lollards in regard to the Bible as the rule of faith, and the Lollards because he appealed to reason as the interpreter of the Bible; he displeased the clergy also by his adoption in theological debate of the mother-tongue, but figures since in literature as the first English theologian; he was accused of treating authority with disrespect, as well as setting up reason above revelation, obliged to recant in a most humiliating manner, deprived of his bishopric, and condemned to solitary confinement, and denied the use of books and writing materials (1390-1460).

PECULIAR PEOPLE, a religious sect laying stress on faith-healing, founded in London in 1838 by John Banyars and J. W. Bridges.

PEDRO I., emperor of Brazil, second son of John VI. of Portugal; reigned from 1822 to 1831, when he abdicated in favour of his son (1798-1834).

PEDRO II., emperor of Brazil, son of preceding, ascended the throne in 1831; reigned peacefully till 1889, when a sudden revolution obliged him to resign and retire to Europe and take up his abode in France, where he indulged his taste for science and learning (1825-1891).

PEEBLES SHIRE, a lowland Scottish county bordered by Lanark, Midlothian, Selkirk, and Dumfries; comprises hilly pastoral land watered by the upper Tweed; Windiestraw, Hartfell, and Broadlaw are the highest of its grassy hills; among the lesser rivers are the Leithen and Quair; some crops are grown, but most of the land is devoted to sheep grazing; a little coal is found in the N.; the only towns are Innerleithen and Peebles, the county town, engaged in tweed manufacture. The county is known also by the name of Tweeddale; its representation in Parliament is united with that of Selkirk.

PENNY, WILLIAM, founder of Pennsylvania, the son of an admiral, born in London; was converted to Quakerism while a student at Oxford, and for a fanatical attack on certain fellow-students expelled from the University; his father sent him to travel in France, and later placed him in charge of his Irish estates; his religious views occasioned several disputes with his father, and ultimately brought him into conflict with the Government; he spent several periods of imprisonment writing books in defence of religious liberty, among them "The Great Cause of Liberty of Conscience" (1671); then travelled in Holland and Germany propagating his views; his father's death brought him a fortune and a claim upon the Crown which he commuted for a grant of land in North America, where he founded (1682) the colony of Pennsylvania—the prefix Penn, by command of Charles II., in honour of the admiral; here he established a refuge for all persecuted religionists, and, laying out Philadelphia as the capital, governed his colony wisely and generously for two years; he returned to England, where his friendship with James II. brought many advantages to the Quakers, but laid him under harassing and undeserved prosecutions for treason in the succeeding reign; a second visit to his colony (1699–1701) gave it much useful legislation; on his return his agent practically ruined him, and he was a prisoner in the Fleet in 1708; the closing years of his life were clouded by mental decay (1644–1718).

PENNANT, THOMAS, traveller and naturalist, born near Holywell, Flintshire; studied at Oxford, but took no degree; in 1746 he made a tour of Cornwall; among his subsequent journeys, of which he published accounts, were tours in Ireland (1754), the Continent (1764), Scotland (1769 and 1772), and Wales; he wrote several works on zoological subjects, and published an amusing "Literary Life of the late Thomas Pennant, Esq., by Himself," 1793 (1726–1798).

PENNSYLVANIA, most populous but one of the American States, lies N. of Mason and Dixon's Line, separated by New Jersey, on the E. by the Delaware River, with Ohio on the W., New York on the N., and Lake Erie at the NW. corner. The country is hilly, being traversed by the Blue Mountains and the Alleghany ranges, with many fertile valleys between the chains, extensive forests, and much picturesque scenery. The Cumberland Valley in the W. is one of the best farming lands in New England. The Alleghany River in the W. and the two branches of the Susquehanna in the centre water the State. Pennsylvania is the greatest mining State in the Union; its iron-mines and petroleum-wells supply half the iron and most of the oil used in the country; its bituminous coalbeds in the W. are extremely rich, and the anthracite deposits of the E. are unrivalled; in manufactures, too, it ranks second among the States; these are very varied, the most valuable being iron, steel, and shipbuilding. Founded by Swedes, it passed to English settlers in 1664; the first charter was granted to William Penn in 1681. In the Revolution it took a prominent part, and was among the first States of the Union. Education is well advanced; there are several State colleges. The mining population includes many Irish, Hungarian, and Italian immigrants, among whom riots are frequent. Of the agriculturists many are of Dutch descent, and many of them speak a Low German patois known as Pennsylvania Dutch. Harrisburg is the capital; the metropolis is Philadelphia, the second largest city in the country; while Pittsburg, Alleghany, Scranton, and Reading are among the many large towns.

PENNY, originally a silver coin, weighed in the 7th century $\frac{1}{16}$ th of a Saxon pound, but decreased in weight till in Elizabeth's time it was $\frac{1}{2}$ of an ounce troy. It was at first indented with a cross so as to be broken for halfpennies and farthings, but silver coins of these denominations were coined by Edward I. Edward VI. stopped the farthings, and the halfpence were stopped in the Commonwealth. Copper coinage was established in 1672. The present coins were issued first in 1860. They are half the size of their predecessors, and intrinsically worth one-seventh of their nominal value.

PÉRIODIC TABLE, the arrangement of the chemical elements in order of atomic weight; Mendeleeff (q.v.) found that similar elements fell in columns or periods under one another; the table showed clearly where an element was missing and enabled him to predict the properties of the unknown elements; later work showed that some of the anomalies of the table disappeared if atomic numbers were substituted for atomic weights, as suggested by H. G. Moseley (q.v.).

PÉRIPATETIC PHILOSOPHY, the name given to the philosophy of Aristotle, from his habit of walking about with his disciples as he philosophised in the shady walks of the Lyceum.

PERKIN, SIR WILLIAM HENRY, British chemist, who first produced the aniline dyes and laid the foundations of the modern coal-tar dye industry (1838-1907).

PERKIN, WILLIAM HENRY, British chemist, son of Sir W. H. Perkin; professor at Oxford and technical adviser to the British Dyestuffs Corporation (1860-1929).

PERMALLOY, an alloy of about 80 per cent. nickel and 20 per cent. iron, with remarkable magnetic properties, used for telephone apparatus.

PERMIAN, the geological strata forming the top of the palaeozoic deposits, appearing in England in the narrow band of magnesian limestone which stretches from Sunderland to near Nottingham, and in the red sandstones of Cumberland, South Devon, and elsewhere; Permian times were conspicuous for great volcanic activity and mountain-building movements, as well as the development of reptilian forms of life.

PERMITT PROCEDURE, a process for the softening of hard water by means of scollite minerals.

PERNAMBUCO, a seaport in N. Brazil, consists of three portions connected by bridges: Recife, on a peninsula, the business quarter; San Antonio, the modern quarter, on an intermediate island; and Bon Vista, on the mainland; manufactures cotton and tobacco, and has shipbuilding yards; the trade chiefly with England, the United States, and France; it is the capital of a province of the name, producing sugar and cotton.

PERONELLA, in fairy legend a pretty country lass who exchanges places with an old widowed queen, and receives the homage due to royalty, but gladly takes back her rags and beauty.

PERRIGNAN, a town on the Têt, 7 m. from the sea; a fortress in the French department of Pyrénées-Orientales; has a cathedral of the 14th century and a bourse in Moorish-Gothic, and manufactures wine and brandy; belonged originally to Aragon; was taken by France in 1475, and retaken, after restoration to Spain, in 1642, since which time it has belonged to France.

PERRAULT, CHARLES, French man of letters, born in Paris; bred to the bar; distinguished as the author of inimitable fairy tales, which have immortalised his name, such as "Puss in Boots," "Cinderella," "Bluebeard," &c., as also "Parallèle des Anciens et des Modernes" in which his aim was to show—an ill-informed attempt—that the ancients were inferior in everything to the moderns (1628-1703).

PERSECUTIONS OF THE CHURCH, by which are meant those at the hands of Imperial Rome, are usually reckoned 10 in number, viz., those under Nero in 64, Domitian 95, Trajan 107, Hadrian 125, Marcus Aurelius 165, Severus 202, Maximinus 235, Decius 249, Valerianus 257, and Diocletian 303.

PERSEPHONE, in the Greek mythology the daughter of Zeus and Demeter, the Proserpine of the Romans. See PROSERPINE.

PERSEPOLIS, the ancient capital of Persia, represented now by its ruins, which stand 25 m. from the N.W. shores of Lake Urmia, on the banks of the Murghab River, though in its palmy days it was described as "the Glory of the East."

PERSEUS, in the Greek mythology the son of Zeus and Danaë, and the grandson of Acrisius, king of Argos, of whom it was predicted before his birth that he would kill his grandfather, who at his birth enclosed both his mother and him in a chest and cast it into the sea, which bore them to an island where they became slaves of the king, Polydectes, who sought to marry Danaë; falling in his suit, and to compel her to submission, he ordered Perseus off to fetch him the head of the Medusa; who, aided by Hermes and Athena, was successful in his mission, cut off the head of the Medusa with the help of a mirror and sickle, brought it away with him in a pouch, and after delivering and marrying Andromeda in his return journey, exposed the head before Polydectes and court at a banquet, which turned them all into stone, whereupon he gave the Gorgon's head to Athena to place on her shield, and set out for Argos; Acrisius, hearing of his approach, fled, but was afterwards killed accidentally by his grandson, who in throwing a discus had crushed his foot.

PERSHING, JOHN JOSEPH, American general. He joined an American cavalry regiment, saw service in the war with Spain in 1898, and was in charge of the Philippine expedition the following year; he was a military attaché in Japan, was in Mexico in 1916, and in 1917 commanded the American troops in France till the end of the Great War (1860-1918).

PERSIA, occupies the tableland 5000 ft. high between the Persian Gulf and Arabian Sea on the S., the Caspian Sea and Turkistan on the N., Armenia on the W., and Afghanistan and Baluchistan on the E., and is a country three times as large as France; lofty mountain ranges traverse it from NW. to SE. and gird its northern boundary; the highest peak is Mount Demavend, 18,500 ft., in the Elburz, overlooking the Caspian. Most of the rivers evaporate inland; only one is navigable, the Harun, in the SW.; Lake Urmiah, in the NW., is the largest, a very salt and shallow sheet of water. The eastern half of the country is largely desert, where the sand is swept about in clouds by the winds. With little rain, the climate is intensely hot in summer and cold in winter. Forests clothe the outer slopes of the mountains, and scanty brushwood the inner plains. Wheat and barley are grown on higher levels, and cotton, sugar, and fruits on the lower, all with the help of irrigation. Agriculture is the chief industry; there are manufactures of carpets, shawls, and porcelain. The internal trade is chiefly carried on by caravans; foreign trade is not extensive, and is chiefly in Russian hands; the exports include opium, carpets, pearls, and turquoise. The capital is Teheran, a narrow crooked, squalid town, at the southern foot of the Elburz. Tabriz, in the N.W., is the emporium of trade. Isfahan, Meshed, Bartsurash, and Shiraz are the other important towns. The Government is despotic; the emperor is called the Shah. The people are courteous and refined in manner, witty, and fluent in speech; they are of Aryan stock and Mohammedan faith. The original empire of Persia was established by Cyrus 537 B.C. A century later decay set in. Revival under Parthian and Sassanian dynasties lasted from 138 B.C. till A.D. 639. Persia became then a province of the Arabs. From the 14th century it fell under Mongol sway, and again in the 16th century under Turkish. The present dynasty was founded in 1795.

PERSIAN GULF, a great inland sea lying between Arabia and Persia, and entered from the Indian Ocean through the Gulf of Oman; is 650 m. long and from 50 to 250 m. broad. The Arabian coast is low and sandy, the Persian high. The chief islands are in the W., where also is the Great Pearl Bank. The only river of importance received is the Shat-el-Arab, which brings down the waters of the Euphrates and the Tigris.

PERSIAN WARS, were conducted by Persia in the three expeditions against Greece, first in 490 B.C. under Darius, and defeated by the Athenians under Miltiades at Marathon; the second, 480 B.C., under Xerxes, opposed by Leonidas and his 300 Spartans at Thermopylae, and defeated by the Athenians under Themistocles at Salamis by sea; and the third, in 479 B.C., under Xerxes, defeated by the Greeks under the Spartan Pausanias at Plataea.

PERSIANS, a name given to sculptured draped male figures used as columns.

PERSIANS, THE, belonged to the Aryan race, hence Iran, the original name of their country; they were related rather to the Western than the Eastern world, and it is from them that continuous history takes its start; they first recognised an ethereal essence, which they called Light, as the principle of all good, and man as related to it in such a way that, by the worship of it, he became assimilated to it himself. Among them first the individual subject stood face to face with a universal object, and claimed a kinship with it as the light of life. The epoch thus created was the emancipation of the human being from dependent childhood to self-dependent manhood, and it constituted the first epoch in the self-conscious history, which is the history proper, of the human race. The idea the Persians formed of the principle of good came far short of the reality indeed, but they first saw that it was of purely illuminating quality and universal, and that the destiny of man was to relate himself to it, to know, worship, and obey it. With the ethereal principle of good they associated an equally ethereal principle of evil, and, as they identified the one with light, they identified the other with darkness. Man they regarded as related to both, and his destiny to adore the one and disown the other as master. As the light had no portion in the darkness, and the darkness no portion in the light, the religion arose which pervades that of the Bible, which requires the children of the former to separate from those of the latter.

PERSIFLAGE, a French term for a light, quizzing mockery, or scoffing, especially on serious subjects, out of a cool, callous contempt for them.

PERSIGNY, FIALIN, DUC DE, a French statesman, a supporter all along of Louis Napoleon, abetting him in all his efforts to attain the throne of France, from the affair of Strasbourg in 1836 to the coup d'état of December, 1851, and becoming in the end Minister of the Interior under him; had to leave France at the overthrow of the Empire (1868-1872).

PERSIUS, the last king of Macedonia; was conquered by Paulus Aemilius, and died captive at Rome, 167 B.C.

PERSIUS, Roman satirist, born in Etruria, was a pupil and friend of Cornutus the Stoic; a man much esteemed, who died young, only 28; wrote six short satires in the purity of a white-souled manhood, of much native vigour, though not equal to those of Horace and Juvenal, but commanding the regard of all scholars down to the present time; they have often been translated (34-68).

PERTH, the county town of Perthshire, on the Tay, 22 m. W. of Dundee; is a beautifully situated town, with fine buildings, the only old one being the restored St. John's Church. Its industries are dyeing and ink-making. At Scoon, 2 m. distant, the kings of Scotland were crowned; and the murder of James I., the Gowrie conspiracy, and the battle of Tippermuir are but a few of its many historical associations. "The Five Articles of Perth," adopted by a General Assembly held there in 1618, did much to precipitate the conflict between the Royal power and the Scottish Church; they enjoined kneeling at the Lord's Supper, observance of Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and Pentecost, confirmation, and the private administration of the sacraments.

PERTH, the capital of West Australia, on the Swan River; has many fine buildings, including Anglican and Roman Catholic cathedrals, library and art gallery.

PERTSHIRE, the most beautiful and varied county in Scotland, occupies the whole of the Tay Valley and part of the Forth, and is bounded by nine other counties. The N. and W. are mountainous, with many rivers and lakes, and much of the finest scenery in Scotland; the Trossachs and Loch Katrine are world-famed. In the E. is extensive woodland and the Carse of Gowrie, one of the most fertile of Scottish plains. Ben Lawers is the highest mountain. Loch Tay the largest lake. Much of the soil is good only for sheep farms, deer forests, and grouse moors; the county is visited annually by thousands of tourists and sportsmen.

PERTINAX, HELVIUS, Roman emperor in succession to Commodus; rose from the ranks by his military services to the imperial dignity, which he was pressed to accept against his will, and was assassinated by the Praetorian Guards less than three months after, in consequence of the reforms he projected in order to restore the ancient discipline of the army (126-193).

PERTURBATIONS, name given to irregularities or slight deviations in the movement of a heavenly body, due chiefly to the neighbourhood of another planet.

PERU, a country in the W. of South America, lies between Brazil and Bolivia and the Pacific, with Ecuador on the N. and Chile on the S.; it consists of a seaboard plain, hot and rainless, but intersected by rich river courses, in which sugar, cotton, and coffee are grown; the Andes chains, snow-tipped and presenting every kind of climate and variety of vegetation on their slopes and in their valleys, rich in minerals and yielding chiefly great quantities of silver; and the Montana, the eastward slopes of the Andes, clad with valuable forests where the cinchona is cultivated, and the upland basins of the Ucayali River and the Upper Amazon, very fertile, with great coffee and cacao plantations and abundant rain; the chief articles of export are silver, nitre, gum, sugar, and wool. Lima, the capital, is 8 m. inland from its port Callao; has an old cathedral, and is the chief centre of commerce; its principal merchants are Germans. The government is republican; the ruling classes are of Spanish descent, but half of the population are Inca Indians and a quarter are half-castes. From the 12th to the 16th centuries the Incas enjoyed a high state of civilisation and an extensive empire administered on socialistic principles; they attained great skill in the industries and arts. The Spanish conqueror Pizarro, landing in 1532, overthrew the empire and established the colony; after three centuries of oppression Peru threw off the Spanish yoke in 1821.

The history of the republic has been one of continual restlessness, and a war with Chile, 1879-1884, ended in complete disaster.

PERUGIA, Italian walled city on the right bank of the Tiber, 127 m. by rail N. of Rome, with a cathedral of the 15th century, some noteworthy churches, a Gothic municipal palace, picture gallery, university, and library; is rich in art treasures and antiquarian remains; it has silk and woollen industries; it was anciently called Perusia, and was one of the cities of ancient Etruria, and in its day has experienced very varied fortunes; it was the centre of the Umbrian school of painting.

PERUGINO, his proper name Pietro Vannucci, Italian painter, born near Perugia, whence his name; studied with Leonardo da Vinci at Florence, where he chiefly resided; was one of the teachers of Raphael, painted religious subjects, did frescoes for churches that have nearly all perished, a "Christ giving the Keys to Peter" being the best extant; Ruskin contrasts his work with Turner's; "in Turner's distinctive work," he says, "colour is scarcely acknowledged unless under influence of sunshine . . . wherever the sun is not, there is melancholy and evil," but "in Perugin's distinctive work"—to whom he therefore gives "the captain's place over all"—"there is simply no darkness, no wrong. Every colour is lovely and every space is light; the world, the universe, is divine; all sadness is a part of harmony, and all gloom a part of light"; there are five paintings by him in the National Gallery, London (1446-1524).

PESCHIERA, one of the fortresses of the Quadrilateral (q.v.), on an island in the Mincio, 14 m. W. of Verona.

PESHAWAR, a town on the Indian frontier, and centre of trade with Afghanistan, is 10 m. from the entrance of the Khyber Pass, on the Kabul River, and though ill-fortified is a bulwark of the empire, being provided with a large garrison of infantry and artillery.

PESHITO (i.e. simple), a version of the Bible in Syriac, executed not later than the middle of the 2nd century for Judaic Christians in the Syrian Church, the version of the Old Testament being executed direct from the Hebrew and that of the New being the first translation of the Greek of it into a foreign tongue, and both of value in questions affecting exegesis and the original text; the New Testament version contains all the books now included except the Apocalypse, Jude, 2 Peter, and 2 and 3 John.

PESSIMISM, a name given now to a habit of feeling, now to a system of opinion; as the former it denotes a tendency to dwell on the dark or gloomy side of things, culminating in a sense of their vanity and nothingness, while in the latter it is applied to all systems of opinion which lay the finger on some black spot in the structure of the life of the world or of the universe, which so long as it remains is thought to render it unworthy of existence.

PESTALOZZI, JOHANN HEINRICH, a celebrated educationist, born in Zurich; the founder of a natural system of education, beginning with childhood, who, however unsuccessful in the working of it himself from his want of administrative faculty, persuaded others by his writings to adopt it, especially in Germany, and to adopt it both enthusiastically and successfully; his method, which he derived from Rousseau, was based on the study of human nature as we find it born in the child, and it aimed at the harmonious development of all its innate capabilities, beginning with the most rudimentary (1746-1827).

PESTH, or BUDAPEST, on the left bank of the Danube, forming one municipality with Buda on the right, is the capital of Hungary, and 173 m. by rail E. of Vienna; Pesth is built on a plain, joined to Buda by three bridges, the last on the Danube, and is a thriving modern city, with picture galleries, parliament house, library, university, science schools, many baths, and public gardens; it makes machinery, agricultural implements, cutlery, flour, &c., and does a great trade in corn, wool, hides, wines, and bacon.

PETAINE, HENRI PHILIPPE, French general. Joining the army in 1878, he was in charge of the 4th Brigade at the start of the Great War; in September, 1915, he took charge of the 33rd Corps, and was prominent in the Champagne offensive; he took charge of the defence of Verdun in February, 1916, and in 1917 succeeded Nivelle in command of the armies of the North; in 1918, when Foch took command of all the Allied troops, Pétain was made commander-in-chief of the French armies (1858-).

PETALISM, banishment in Sparta similar to ostracism in Athens, procured by writing the name on an olive leaf.

PETARD, a cone-shaped explosive machine for bursting open gates, barriers, &c., made of iron, and filled with powder and ball, in use in the 16th century.

PETASUS, the winged-cap of the god Mercury.

PETCHORA, the largest river in Northern Russia, rises in the Ural Mountains and flows N. through Vologda and Archangel, then westward and N. again, entering the Arctic Ocean by a large, island-studded estuary, after a course of 1000 m. through sombre forests and wild scenery.

PETER, THE APOSTLE, originally called Simon, was a fisherman on the Sea of Galilee; one of the first called by Christ to become a disciple; the first to recognise, as the foundation-stone of the Church, the divinity in the humanity of His Master, and the first thereafter to recognise and proclaim that divinity as glorified in the Cross, to whom were committed the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and who accordingly was the first to open the door of it to the Gentile world. He was the principal figure in the history of the early Christian Church, but was soon eclipsed by the overpowering presence and zeal of Paul. Tradition, indeed, has something to tell of him, but from it little that is trustworthy can be gathered except that he finished his career by martyrdom in the city of Rome. This Apostle is represented in Christian art as an old man, bald-headed, with a flowing beard, dressed in a white mantle, and holding a scroll in his hand, his attributes being the keys, and a sword in symbol of his martyrdom.

PETER, THE FIRST EPISTLE OF, addressed especially to Jewish Christians in certain churches of Asia Minor, the members of which were suffering persecution at the hands of their adversaries as evil-doers; it was written to exhort them to rebut the charge by a life of simple well-doing, and to comfort them under it with the promise of the return of the Lord.

PETER, THE SECOND EPISTLE OF, addressed to all who anywhere bore the Christian name; it appears to have been written not long before the Apostle's death to counteract certain fatal forms of error, at once doctrinal and practical, that had already begun to creep into the Church, and against which we meet with the same warnings in the Epistle of Jude, the doctrinal error being the denial of Christ as Lord, and the practical the denial of Him as the way, the truth, and the life, to the peril of the forfeiture of eternal life.

PETER, THE WILD BOY, a savage creature of 13 years of age, found in 1725 in a forest of Hanover, who was accustomed to walk on all fours, and climb trees like a squirrel, living on wild plants, grass, and moss, and who could not be weaned from these habits, or taught to speak more than a syllable or two; he wore a brass collar with his name on it; at length refused all food, and died in 1786.

PETER MARTYR, (1) a Dominican notorious for his severity as a member of the Inquisition, murdered by a mob at Como in 1252; became the patron saint of the Inquisition. (2) A Protestant reformer, born at Florence, became a monk and abbot at Lucca, from which, on embracing the doctrines of the Reformation, he was forced to flee, first to Switzerland and then to England in the reign of Edward VI., but had to retreat from the latter on the accession of Mary to Strasburg, and at length to Zurich, where he died (1500-1562). (3) A historian, born at Arona, rose to become bishop of Jamaica, wrote on the discovery of America; d. 1525.

PETER PAN, the boy who would not grow up, a character in the play of the name by Sir James Barrie; a statue to his memory is a feature of Kensington Gardens, London.

PETER THE GREAT, emperor of Russia, son of the Czar Alexis, born in Moscow; succeeded his half-brother Feodor in 1682, but was forced for a time to share the throne with his half-sister Sophia, acting as regent for her brother Ivan; conscious of his imperfect education, he chose a Genoese named Lefort as his preceptor, and after some years' careful training he deposed Sophia, and entered Moscow as sole ruler in 1689; with the help of Lefort and Patrick Gordon, a Scotman, he proceeded to raise and discipline an army on the European model, and determined also to construct a navy; to reach the sea he made war on the Turks, and possessed himself of the port of Azov, at the mouth of the Don; hither he invited skilled artificers from Austria, Venice, Prussia, and Holland, and a navy was built; from 1697 to 1698 he visited the countries on the Baltic and England, acquiring vast stores of information, working as a shipwright in the Dutch yards, and finally taking back with him an army of mechanics; on his return he vigorously reformed the Russian press, schools, and church, introduced European manners and literature, and encouraged foreign trade; desirous now of an opening on the Baltic, he began in 1700 a long contest with Sweden, marked first by many defeats, notably that of Narva, then the seizure of Ingria, and founding of the new capital, St. Petersburg, 1703, the victory of Pultowa, 1712, seizure of the Baltic provinces and part of Finland, 1713, and finally by the Peace of 1721, which ceded the conquered territories to Russia; in 1711 the Turks had recovered Azov; in 1722 war with Persia secured him three Caspian provinces; Peter pursued a vigorous and enlightened policy for the good of Russia, but his disposition was often cruel; his son Alexis was put to death for opposing his reforms, and on his own death he was succeeded by the Empress Catherine I., the daughter of a peasant, who had been his mistress, and whom he had married in 1712 (1672-1725).

PETER THE HERMIT, a monk, born in Amiens, of good family, who is credited with having by his preaching kindled the enthusiasm in Europe which led to the first Crusade; he joined it himself as the leader of an untrained rabble, but made a poor figure at the siege of Antioch, where he was with difficulty prevented from deserting the camp; he afterwards founded a monastery near Liège, where he died (1050-1115).

PETERBOROUGH, an English cathedral city, on the Nen, partly in Huntingdonshire and partly in Northamptonshire, on the edge of the Fen country, 76 m. N. of London; has an old town hall, manufactures of farm implements, trade in malt and coal, and is a great railway centre; the cathedral is one of the finest in Britain, of very varied architecture, and was restored in 1890.

PETERBOROUGH, CHARLES MORDAUNT, EARL OF, saw some active service as a volunteer in Charles II.'s navy, and on the accession of James II. threw himself into politics as an opponent of the king; William III. showed him great favour; he was of the Queen's Council of Regency when William was in Ireland, but imprudent intrigues brought him a short confinement in the Tower in 1697; the war of the Spanish Succession was the opportunity which brought him fame; appointed to the command of the British and Dutch forces, which fought for Charles of Austria, he reduced Barcelona, 1705, and Valencia, 1706; retook Barcelona from the French, and but for Charles's hindrance would have entered Madrid; differences with other generals led to his recall in 1707; the rest of his life was spent in retirement; he was the friend of Pope, and held by him in genuine esteem; he died in Lisbon (1658-1735).

PETERHEAD, a seaport on the E. coast of Aberdeenshire, 30 m. N.E. of Aberdeen; built irregularly of reddish granite; has a free library and museum, and is the seat of a convict prison; the chief industry is herring-fishing; there are three harbours, one of which is a great harbour of refuge.

PETERHOF, a town on the Gulf of Finland, 18 m. W. of Leningrad, with a palace of the Czar built in 1711 by Peter the Great.

PETERLOO, a name, suggested by Waterloo, given to an insurrectionary gathering in 1819 of workers in St. Peter's Field, Manchester, to demand Parliamentary reform, the assembly being dispersed by the military to the sacrifice of 13 lives and the wounding of 600 people, a proceeding which excited widespread indignation and contributed to promote the cause which it was intended to defeat.

PETER'S, ST., church at Rome, is built, it is alleged, over the tomb of St. Peter, and on the site of the basilica erected by Constantine and Helena in 306. The original structure after falling into decay was begun to be rebuilt in 1450, and finally consecrated by Urban XIII. in 1626. It is the largest and grandest church in Christendom, covers an area of over 26,000 square yards, the interior of it in length being 200 yards, the transept 150 yards, the nave 150, and the dome 405. It contains thirty altars, and is adorned with numerous statues and monuments.

PETER'S PENNY, an annual tribute of a silver penny per household in England to support the chair of St. Peter at Rome, which continued more or less to be levied from the end of the 8th century till the days of Elizabeth, when it ceased. The payment was revived in 1848 in Britain, France, and Belgium in compensation to the Pope for loss of his territorial possessions, being paid by Catholics as a voluntary levy.

PETERWARDEIN, a strong Austrian fortress on the right bank of the Danube, near the Serbian frontier, 40 m. N.W. of Belgrade; stands among unhealthy marshes.

PETION DE VILLENEUVE, JÉRÔME, born in Chartres; figured in the French Revolution as a zealous republican, member of the Tiers État, one of the commission to reconduct the royal family from Varennes; was mayor of Paris in the year of the September massacres, 1792; was first President of the Convention, and, though his influence was declining, member of the first Committee of Defence, 1793; his attack on Robespierre proving unsuccessful, he committed suicide; his body was afterwards found on the Landes of Bordeaux half devoured by wolves; was surnamed the "Virtuous," as Robespierre was the "Incorruptible"; was of the Girondist party; had "unalterable beliefs, not hindmost of them," says Carlyle, "belief in himself" (1763-1794).

PETITE NATURE, a French term applied to pictures containing figures less than life-size, but with the effect of life-size.

PETITION OF RIGHT, a petition presented to Charles I. by the Commons in 1628, which became law by the king's acceptance of it. It sought for and obtained the abolition of certain grievances which the country unconstitutionally suffered from, such as taxation or levying of money without consent of Parliament, imprisonment without cause shown, billeting of troops and recourse to martial law in a time of peace. This petition Charles I. would at first fain have evaded, but the Commons would be satisfied with nothing less than its acceptance entire.

PETŐFI, SANDOR, celebrated Magyar poet and patriot, born in the county of Pesth, of poor parents; first announced himself as a poet in 1844; wrote a number of war-songs; fought in the cause of the revolution of 1848, and fell in the battle of Schässburg; his poetry inaugurated a new era in the literature of his country (1823-1849).

PETRA, a ruined city, once the capital of Edom, and afterwards of Arabia Petraea; was a place of some importance at one time as a commercial centre; is remarkable for its rock temples and tombs.

PETRARCH, FRANCESCO, the famous Italian lyric poet, born in Arezzo, in Tuscany, whither his father had gone when exiled with Dante from Florence; spent his youth in Avignon; intended for the profession of law; devoted his time to the study of Cicero and Virgil; met Laura in the church of St. Clare there in 1327, a lady of surpassing beauty; conceived a passion for her which she could not return, and wrote sonnets in praise of her, which immortalised both himself and her; after travel in France and Germany he retired in 1337 to the valley of Vaucluse, where he composed the most of his poems, and his reputation reached its height in 1341, when he was crowned laureate in the Capitol of Rome; he was in Italy when tidings reached him of the death of Laura in 1348, on the anniversary of the day when he first met her, upon which he gave expression to his feelings over the event in a touching note of it in his Vinell; we find him again at Rome in 1350, and after moving from place to place settled in Arqua in 1370, where he died; his Latin works are numerous, and include an epic on the Second Punic war, Eloques, Epistles in verse, and Letters of value, giving the details of his life; his fame rests on his lyrics; by those alone he still lives, and that more from the finished art in which they are written than from any glow of feeling they kindle in the reader's heart (1304-1374).

PETRI, LAURENTIUS, a Swedish Reformer; was a disciple of Luther; became professor of Theology and first Protestant archbishop of Upsala, and superintended the translation of the Bible into Swedish (1499-1573).

PETRIE, GEORGE, Irish archaeologist, born in Dublin, of Scottish parentage; bred to art; executed Irish landscapes, but is best known for his "Essay on the Round Towers of Ireland," a work of no small interest (1789-1860).

PETRIE, SIR WILLIAM MATTHEW FLINDERS, Egyptologist, son of an Australian explorer; after explorations at Stonehenge, surveyed the pyramids and temples of Ghizeh in 1881-1882; excavated for the Egyptian Exploration Fund Naukratis, Amn, and Defenneh; achieved many other important works of the kind, and issued a popular work, "Ten Years' Digging in Egypt" (1853-).

PETROGRAD, the name given in Russia to St. Petersburg at the start of the Great War. It is now called Leningrad (q.v.).

PETROLEUM, the natural oil from which are obtained the supplies of petrol, paraffin oil, and oil fuel; it consists chiefly of the hydrocarbons known as paraffins, with smaller quantities of olefines, benzene, toluene, and, in some oil, acetylenes and naphthalenes; the crude oil is separated into fractions, the more volatile constituents being used for motor spirit (gasoline) and those of higher boiling-point as liquid fuel and for Diesel engines; other products of petroleum are rhigoline, used as an anæsthetic, and vaseline; over 70 per cent. of the world's supply comes from the U.S.A., whilst smaller quantities are produced in Mexico, Russia, Persia, Rumania, and the Dutch East Indies.

PETROLEUSE, was a name given to certain Parisian women of the Commune of 1871, who poured petroleum on the Hôtel de Ville and other buildings to burn them.

PETRONIUS, a Roman satirist and accomplished voluptuary at the court of Nero, and the director-in-chief of the imperial pleasures; accused of treason, and dreading death at the hands of the emperor his master, he opened his veins, and by bandaging them bled slowly to death, showing the while the same frivolity as throughout his life; he left behind him a work, extant now only in fragments, but enough to expose the abyss of profligacy in which the Roman world was then sunk at that crisis of its fate; d. 63.

PETTIE, JOHN, painter, born in Edinburgh; his works, chiefly historical, were numerous, and of a high character, the best-known being "The Drunken Court-Martial," "Jacobites," and "The Vigil" (1839-1893).

PETTY, SIR WILLIAM, political economist, born in Hampshire; was a man of versatile genius, varied attainments, and untiring energy; was skilled in medicine, in music, in mechanics, and in engineering, as well as economics, to which especially he contributed by his pen (1623-1687).

PETTY JURY, a jury of 12 elected to try a criminal case after a true bill against the accused has been found by a Grand Jury.

PETTY OFFICERS, officers in the navy, consisting of four grades, and corresponding in function and responsibility to non-commissioned officers in the army.

PETTY SESSIONS, name given to sessions of justices of the peace to try small cases without a jury.

PEUTINGER, CONRAD, an Augsburg antiquary, left at his death a 13th-century copy of a 3rd-century map of the Roman military roads, now in the Imperial Library at Vienna, known as the "Tabula Peutingeriana" (1465-1547).

PEVENSEY, a village in Sussex close by the landing-place of William the Conqueror in 1066; it has the ruins of an old Norman Castle.

PFÄTERS, hot springs near a village of the same name in the Swiss canton of St. Gall; have been in use for 800 years.

PPAHLBAUTEN, lake dwellings of prehistoric date in Switzerland.

PPALZ, the German name for the Palatinate.

PFEIFFER, IDA, a celebrated traveller, born in Vienna; being separated from her husband, and having completed the education of her two sons and settled them in life, commenced her career of travel in 1842, in which year she visited Palestine, in 1845 visited Scandinavia, in 1846 essayed a voyage round the world by Cape Horn, in 1851 a second by the Cape of Good Hope, and in 1856 an expedition to Madagascar, returning at the end of each to Vienna and publishing accounts of them (1797-1858).

PFLIEDERER, OTTO, a philosophical theologian, born in Wurtemberg, professor at Jena, and afterwards at Berlin; wrote on religion, the philosophy of it and sundry developments of it, in an able manner, as well as lectured on it in Edinburgh in connection with the Gifford trust (1839-1908).

PFORZHEIM, manufacturing town in Baden, on the N. of the Black Forest; manufactures gold and silver ornaments, and has chemical and other factories.

PHÆDRUS, a Latin fabulist, of the age of Augustus, born in Macedonia, and settled in Rome; originally a slave, was manumitted by Augustus; his fables, 97 in number, were written in verse, and are mostly translations from Æsop, the best of them such as keep closely to the original.

PHÆTHON (i.e. the shining one, so called from his father), the son of Helios (q.v.); persuaded his father to allow him for one day to drive the chariot of the sun across the heavens, but was too weak to check the horses, so that they rushed off their wonted track and nearly set the world on fire, whereupon Zeus transfixed him with a thunderbolt, metamorphosed his sisters who had yoked the horses for him into poplars and their tears into amber.

PHAGOCYTES, the amœboid cells, present in the blood, which resist the attacks of microbes.

PHALANX, among the Greeks a body of heavy infantry armed with long spears and short swords, standing in line close behind one another, generally 8 men deep, the Macedonian formation being as many as 16; its movements were too heavy, and it was dashed in pieces before the legions of Rome to its extinction; it was superseded by the Roman legion.

PHALARIS, a tyrant of Agrigentum, in Sicily, in the 6th century, who is said, among other cruelties, to have roasted the victims of his tyranny in a brazen bull which bears his name; the "Letters of Phalaris," at one time ascribed to him, have been proved to be spurious.

PHALLUS, a symbol of the generative power of nature, being a representation of the male organ of generation, and associated with rites and ceremonies of nature-worship in the early stages of civilised life; phallic worship was supposed to have a magic influence in inducing fertility among the flocks and herds, as well as in the soil of the earth; it is still prevalent in India and Japan. See LINGA.

PHARAMOND, a knight of the Round Table, and the reputed first king of the Franks.

PHARAOH, a name given in the Old Testament to the kings of Egypt, identified with that of the sun-god Phra, and applied to the king as his representative on earth; some 10 of the name occur in the Bible, and it is a matter of difficulty often to distinguish one from another.

PHARISEES (i.e. Separatists), a sect of the Jews who adopted or received this name because of the attitude of isolation from the rest of the nation which they were compelled to assume at the time of their origin. This was some time between the years 165 and 105 B.C., on their discovery that the later Maccabean chiefs were aiming at more than religious liberty, and in their own interests contemplating the erection of a worldly kingdom that would be the death of the theocratic, which it was the purpose of Providence they should establish; this was the separate ground which they at first assumed alone, but they in the end carried the great body of the nation along with them. They were scrupulously exact in their interpretation and observance of the Jewish law as the rule to regulate the life of the Jewish community in every department, and were the representatives of that legal tendency which gave character to the development of Judaism proper during the period which elapsed between the date of the Captivity and the advent of Christianity. The law they observed, however, was not the written law as it stood, but that law as expounded by the oral law of the Scribes, as the sole key to its interpretation, and they were thus at length the representatives of clericalism as well as legalism in the Jewish Church, and in doing so they took their ground upon a principle which is the distinctive article of orthodox Judaism in the matter to the present day. In the days of Christ they stood in marked opposition to the Sadducees (q.v.) both in their dogmatic views and their political principles. As against them, on the dogmatic side, they believed in a spiritual world and in an established moral order, and on the political their rule was to abstain from politics, except in so far as they might injuriously affect the life and interests of the nation; but at that time they had degenerated into mere formalists, whose religion was a conspicuous hypocrisy, and it was on this account and their pretensions to superior sanctity that they incurred the indignation and exposed themselves to the condemnation of Christ.

PEAROS, an island of ancient Egypt, near Alexandria, on which the first lighthouse was erected by Ptolemy Philadelphus in 48 B.C.

PEARSAIA, a district in the N. of Greece, the southern portion of the modern province of Larissa; was the scene of Caesar's victory over Pompey, 48 B.C.

PEARLPS, SAMUEL, an English actor, born in Devonport; made his debut as Shylock in London at the Haymarket in 1837, achieved his greatest successes in Sadler's Wells by his representation of Shakespeare's plays and the works of eminent dramatists of the 18th century; was distinguished in comedy as well as tragedy, in which last he primarily appeared and established his fame (1804-1878).

PHENOL, or carbolic acid, a crystalline substance which turns pink on exposure to air, obtained as one of the products in the distillation of coal tar; in solution and mixed with powders it is used as a disinfectant; from phenol picric acid, many drugs, and dyes are manufactured.

PHERECYDES, an ancient Greek philosopher, born in Syros in 6th century B.C.; distinguished as having had Pythagoras among his pupils, and believed to have been the author of many of the doctrines promulgated by his disciple and named Pythagorean.

PHIDIAS, the greatest sculptor of ancient Greece, born in Athens; flourished in the time of Pericles, and was appointed by him to direct the works of art projected to the beautifying of the city, and expressly commissioned to execute certain of these works himself; the chief work that he superintended was the erection of the Parthenon, much of which he himself adorned; and of the statues he executed the most famous were one of Athena of Ivory and gold for the Parthenon, and a colossal one of Zeus, his masterpiece, also of Ivory and gold, for Olympia; accused of having appropriated some of the gold intended for the statue of Athena, he was acquitted, but was afterwards charged with impiety for carrying his own likeness and that of Pericles on the shield of the goddess, and was thrown into prison, where he died, 432 B.C.

PHILADELPHIA, largest city in Pennsylvania, on the Delaware, 100 m. from the sea and 90 m. by rail S.W. of New York; is the third city in the Union in population, manufactures, and commerce, regularly built, with plain, substantial houses and more splendid public buildings, including the town hall, of white marble; a masonic temple and Government offices of granite and the Mint are also fine buildings; there is a university, with colleges of science, medicine, art, and music, many churches, a Roman Catholic cathedral, and many hospitals and charitable institutions; the industries include locomotive building, saw-making, woollen and cotton goods, sugar and oil refining, and chemical works; it trades largely in coal. Founded by William Penn in 1682, it was the central point of the War of Independence; the first Congress met here, and the Declaration of Independence was signed (1776) in a building still standing; here too the Federal Union was signed (1787) and the constitution drawn up (1787), and from 1790 to 1800 it was the capital of the United States.

PHILÆ, an island of syenite stone in the Nile, near Assuan, in Nubia, 1200 ft. long and 50 ft. broad; is almost covered with ancient buildings of great beauty, among which is a temple of Isis, with a great gateway dating from 361 B.C., which was converted into a church in 577.

PHILATORY, a transparent reliquary to contain and exhibit the bones and relics of saints.

PHILEMON, EPISTLE TO, a short letter by Paul to a member of the Church at Colossæ on behalf of a slave, Onesimus, who had deserted his service, gone off with some of his property, and taken refuge in Rome, but had been converted to Christ, and whom he begs that they will not manumit, but simply return him as a brother for his sake.

PHILEMON AND BAUCIS, in the Greek mythology a pair of poor people who, in fond attachment to each other, lived in a small cottage in Phrygia by themselves and gave hospitality to gods in disguise when every other door was shut against them, and to whom, in the judgment that descended upon their inhospitable neighbours, the gods were propitious, and did honour by appointing them to priesthood, when they would rather have been servants, in a temple metamorphosed out of their cottage. Here they continued to minister to old age, and had but one prayer for themselves, that they might in the end die together; in due course, as they sat at the door of the temple one day, bent with years, they were changed, he into an oak and she into a linden. This is Ovid's version of the story, to which he adds as the moral of it, "Those who pliously honour the gods are themselves held in honour."

PHILIDOR, FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ, a celebrated composer and chess-player, born in Dreux; wrote a number of operas; in regard to chess his great maxim was "Pawns are the soul of chess"; died at the time of the Revolution to London, where he died (1726-1795).

PHILIP, an Indian chief whose father had been a staunch friend of the Pilgrim settlers, was himself friendly to the colonists, till in 1671 their encroachments provoked him to retaliation; after six years' fighting, in which many colonists perished and great massacres of Indians took place, he was defeated and slain, 1676.

PHILIP OF MACEDON, the father of Alexander the Great, usurped the kingdom from the infant king Amyntas, his nephew and ward, in 360 B.C.; having secured his throne, he entered on a series of aggressive wars, making expeditions into Thrace and Thessaly; the siege of Olynthus brought him into conflict with Athens, the two cities being allies, and occasioned some of the most brilliant orations of Demosthenes; the successive appeals for his aid against their enemies by the Thebans and the Argives led him into Greece and into the Peloponnese; in 339 B.C. a council of Greek cities appointed him commander-in-chief of their league forces in a projected war against the Locrians, but the Athenians and Thebans opposed his coming; the defeat of their armies at Chæronea, 338 B.C., placed all Greece at his feet; his next project was an expedition against Persia, but while preparations were on foot he was assassinated at Ege; a man of unbridled lust, he was an astute and unscrupulous politician, but of incomparable eloquence, energy, and military skill (362-336 B.C.).

PHILIP II., Philip-Augustus, king of France, shared the throne with his father, Louis VII., from 1179, and succeeded him as sole ruler in 1180 marrying

Isabella of Hainault, he united the Capet and Carolingian houses; his grand aim was to secure to himself some of the English possessions in France; his alliance with Richard of England in the third crusade ended in a quarrel; returning to France he broke his oath to Richard by bargaining with John for portions of the coveted territory; an exhausting war lasted till 1119; on Richard's death Philip supported Arthur against John in his claim to Anjou, Maine, and Touraine; after Arthur's murder, the capture of Château Gaillard in 1204 gave him possession of these three provinces with Normandy and part of Poitou; the victory of Bouvines, 1214, secured his throne, and the rest of his reign was spent in internal reforms and the beautifying of Paris (1165-1223).

PHILIP IV., the Fair, king of France, succeeded his father, Philip III., in 1285; by his marriage with Joanna of Navarre added Navarre, Champagne, and Brle to his realm; but the sturdy valour of the Flemish burghers at Courtrai on the "Day of Spurn" prevented the annexation of Flanders; his fame rests on his struggle and victory over the papal power; a tax on the clergy was condemned by Boniface VIII. in 1296; supported by his nobles and burghers Philip burnt the pope bull, imprisoned the legates, and his ambassador in Rome imprisoned the Pope himself; Boniface died soon after, and in 1305 Philip made Clement V. Pope; kept him at Avignon, and so commenced the seventy years' "captivity"; he forced Clement to decree the suppression of the Templars, and became his willing instrument in executing the decree; he died at Fontainebleau, having proved himself an avaricious and pitiless despot (1268-1314).

PHILIP VI., of Valois, king of France, succeeded Charles IV. in 1328; Edward III. of England contested his claim, contending that the Salic law, though it excluded females, did not exclude their male heirs; Edward was son of a daughter, Philip son of a brother; Philip IV. thus began the Hundred Years' War between France and England, 1337; the French fleet was defeated off Sluys in 1340, and the army at Crécy in 1346; a truce was made, when the war was followed by the Black Death; the worthless king afterwards purchased Majorca (1295-1350).

PHILIP II., king of Spain, only son of the Emperor Charles V.; married Mary Tudor in 1554, and spent over a year in England; in 1555 he succeeded his father in the sovereignty of Spain, Sicily, Milan, the Netherlands, Franche Comté, Mexico, and Peru; a league between Henry II. of France and the Pope was overthrown, and on the death of Mary he married the French princess Isabella, and retired to live in Spain, 1569. Wedding himself now to the cause of the Church, he encouraged the Inquisition in Spain, and introduced it to the Netherlands; the latter revolted, and the Seven United Provinces achieved their independence after a long struggle in 1579; his great effort to overthrow Protestant England ended in the disaster of the Armada, 1588; his last years were embittered by the failure of his intrigues against Navarre, raids of English seamen on his American provinces, and by loathsome disease; he was a bigot in religion, a hard, unloved, and unloving man, and a foolish king; he fatally injured Spain by crushing her chivalrous spirit, by persecuting the industrious Moors, and by destroying her commerce by heavy taxation (1527-1598).

PHILIP V., grandson of Louis XIV., first Bourbon king of Spain; inherited his throne by the testament of his uncle Charles II. in 1700; the rival claim of the Archduke Charles of Austria was supported by England, Austria, Holland, Prussia, Denmark, and Hanover; but the long War of the Spanish Succession terminated in the peace of Utrecht, and left Philip his kingdom; after an unsuccessful movement to recover Sicily and Sardinia for Spain he joined England and France against the Emperor, and gained the former island for his son Charles III.; he died an imbecile at Madrid (1683-1746).

PHILIP THE BOLD, Duke of Burgundy, was the 3rd son of John the Good, king of France; taken captive at Poitiers 1356; on his return to France he received for his bravery the duchies of Touraine and Burgundy; on his brother's accession to the French throne as Charles V. he exchanged the former duchy for the hand of Margaret of Flanders, on the death of whose father he assumed the government of his territories; his wise administration encouraged arts, industries, and commerce, and won the respect and esteem of his subjects; he was afterwards Regent of France when Charles V. became imbecile (1342-1404).

PHILIP THE GOOD, grandson of the above, raised the duchy to its zenith of prosperity, influence, and fame; he was alternately in alliance with England, and at peace with his superior, France, ultimately assisting in driving England out of most of her Continental possessions (1396-1467).

PHILIPHAUGH, a battlefield on the Yarrow, 3 m. W. of Selkirk, was the scene of Leslie's victory over Montrose in 1645.

PHILIPPI, a Macedonian city, founded by Philip of Macedon, was the scene of a victory gained in 42 B.C. by Octavianus and Antony over Brutus and Cassius, and the seat of a church, the first founded by St. Paul in Europe.

PHILIPPIANS, EPISTLE TO THE, an Epistle of Paul written at Rome during his imprisonment there to a church at Philippi, in Macedonia, that had been planted by himself, and the members of which were among the first-fruits of his ministry in Europe. The occasion of writing it was the receipt of a gift from them, and to express the joy it gave him as a token of their affection. It is the least dogmatic of all his Epistles, and affords an example of the Apostle's statement of Christian truth to unbiased minds; one exhortation, however, shows that he is not blind to the rise of an evil which has been the bane of the Church of Christ since the beginning, the spirit of rivalry, and this is evident from the prominence he gives in chapter II. 5-8 to the self-sacrificing lowliness of Christ, and by the counsel he gives them in chapter IV. 8.

PHILIPPII, the name originally applied to Demosthenes' three great orations against Philip of Macedon, then to Cicero's speeches against Mark Antony; now denotes any violent invective written or spoken.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, a large and numerous group in the north of the Malay archipelago, between the China Sea and the Pacific, of which the largest, Luzon, and the next, Mindanao, are both much greater than Ireland; are mountainous and volcanic, subject to eruptions and continuous earthquakes. In the N. of the group cyclones too are common. The climate is moist and warm, but fairly healthy; the soil is very fertile. Rice, maize, sugar, cotton, coffee, and tobacco are cultivated; the forests yield dye-woods, hard timber, and medicinal herbs, and the mines coal and iron, copper, gold, and lead. The chief exports are sugar, hemp, and tobacco. The aboriginal Negritos are now few; half-castes are numerous; the population is chiefly Malayan, Roman Catholic at least nominally in religion, and speaking the Tagal or the Visayan language. Discovered by Magellan in 1621, who was killed on the island of Mactan, they were annexed by Spain in 1569, and held till 1898, when they fell to the Americans. The capital is Manila, on the W. coast of Luzon; Laoag, San Miguel, and Banang are among the largest towns.

PHILIPS, AMBROSE, minor poet, born in Leicester, of good family; friend of Addison and Steele, and a Whig in politics; held several lucrative posts, chiefly in Ireland; wrote pastorals in vigorous and elegant verse, and also some short sentimental verses for children, which earned for him from Henry Carey the nickname of "Nabby-Famby" (1675-1749).

PHILIPS, JOHN, littérateur, born in Oxfordshire, author of "The Splendid Shilling," an admirable burlesque in imitation of Milton, and a poem, "Cider," an imitation of Virgil (1676-1709).

PHILIPS, KATHERINE, poetess, born in London; was the daughter of a London merchant and the wife of a Welsh squire, a highly sentimental but worthy woman; the Society of Friendship, in which the members bore fancy names—hers, which also served her for a nom de plume, was Orinda—had some fame in its day, and brought her, as the foundress, the honour of a dedication from Jeremy Taylor; her work was admired by Cowley and Keats; she was a staunch royalist (1631-1664).

PHILISTINE, the name given by the students in Germany to a non-university man of the middle-class, or a man without (university) culture, or of narrow views of things.

PHILISTINES, a people, for long of uncertain origin, but now generally believed to have been originally emigrants from Crete, who settled in the plain, some 40 m. long by 15 broad, extending along the coast of Palestine from Joppa on the N. to the desert on the S., and whose chief cities were Ashdod, Askelon, Ekron, Gaza, and Gath; they were a trading and agricultural people, were again and again a thorn in the side of the Israelites, but gradually tamed into submission, so as to be virtually extinct in the days of Christ; their chief god was Dagon (q.v.).

PHILIP, JOHN, painter, born in Aberdeen; his early pictures illustrate Scottish subjects, his latest and best illustrate life in Spain, whither he had gone in 1851 for his health (1817-1867).

PHILLIPS, STEPHEN, poet, born in Somerton, near Oxford; spent some years on the stage, then devoted himself to literature, producing the poetical dramas "Paolo and Francesca," "Herod," and "Ulysses" among others; also published "Marpessa" and other volumes of verse (1868-1915).

PHILLIPS, WENDELL, slavery abolitionist and emancipationist generally, born in Boston, U.S., and bred to the bar; was Garrison's aide-de-camp in the cause, and chief, after his death (1811-1884).

PHILO JUDEUS (i.e. Philo the Jew), philosopher of the 1st century, born in Alexandria; studied the Greek philosophy, and found in it, particularly in the teaching of Plato, the rationalist explanation of the religion of Moses, which he regarded as the revelation to which philosophy was but the key; he was a man of great learning and great influence among his people, and was in his old age one of an embassy sent by the Jews of Alexandria in A.D. 40 to Rome to protest against the imperial edict requiring the payment of divine honours to the emperor; he identified the Logos of the Platonists with the Word in the New Testament.

PHILOCTETES, a famous archer, who had been the friend and armour-bearer of Hercules, who instructed him in the use of the bow, and also bequeathed his bow with the poisoned arrows to him after his death; he accompanied the Greeks to the siege of Troy, but one of the arrows fell on his foot, causing a wound the stench of which was intolerable, so that he was left behind at Lemnos, where he remained in misery 10 years, till an oracle declared that Troy could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules; he was accordingly sent for, and being healed of his wound by Æsculapius, assisted at the capture of the city.

PHILOMELA, daughter of Pandion, king of Athens, and sister of Procne; she was the victim of an outrage committed by her brother-in-law Tereus, who cut out her tongue to prevent her exposing him, and kept her in close confinement; here she found means of communicating with her sister, when the two, to avenge the wrong, made away with Itys, Tereus' son, and served him up to his father at a banquet; the fury of Tereus on the discovery knew no bounds, but they escaped his vengeance, Philomela by being changed into a nightingale and Procne into a swallow.

PHILOCEMON, the head of the Achaean League, born in Megalopolis, and the last of the Greek heroes; fought hard to achieve the independence of Greece, but having to struggle against heavy odds, was overpowered; rose from a sick-bed to suppress a revolt, was taken prisoner, thrown into a dungeon, and forced to drink poison (252-182 B.C.).

PHILOSOPHE, name for a philosopher of the school of 18th-century enlightenment, represented by the Encyclopedists (q.v.) of France; the class have been characterised by the delight they took in outraging the religious sentiment.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE was, with the Elixir of Life, the object of the search of the mediæval alchemists. Their theory regarded gold as the most perfect metal, all others being removed from it by various stages of imperfection, and they sought an amalgam of pure sulphur and pure mercury, which, being more perfect still than gold, would transmute the baser metals into the nobler.

PHILOSOPHISM, FRENCH, a philosophy such as the philosophers of France gave instances of, founded on the notion and cultivated in the belief that scientific knowledge is the sovereign remedy for the ills of life, summed up in two articles—first, that "a lie cannot be believed"; and second, that "in spiritual supernatural matters no belief is possible." France's boast being that "she had destroyed religion by extinguishing the abomination" (P'nyame).

PHILOXENUS, a Greek poet who lived at the court of Dionysius the Elder, tyrant of Syracuse; condemned to prison for refusing to praise some verses of the tyrant, he was led forth to criticise others, but returned them as worse, begging the officers who handed them to him to lead him back; when the tyrant was told, he laughed and released him.

PHILPOTTS, HENRY, bishop of Exeter, born in Bridgwater, a keen Tory and uncompromising High-Churchman, the chief actor in the celebrated Gorham case (q.v.), and noted for his obstinate opposition to political reform as the opening of the floodgates of democracy, which he dreaded would subvert everything that was dear to him (1778-1869).

PHILTRE, the name given to certain concoctions of herbs, often deleterious and poisonous, supposed to secure for the person administering it the love of the person to whom it was administered; these love potions were popular in the declining days of Greece and Rome, throughout mediæval Europe, and continue to be compounded to this day in the superstitious East.

PHIZ, the pseudonym of Hablot K. Browne, the illustrator of the first edition of the "Pekwick Papers" of Dickens.

PHLEGETHON, in the Greek mythology a river in the lower world which flowed in torrents of fire, sulphur, and which scorched up everything near it.

PHLOIGISTON, a name given by the old chemists to an imaginary principle of fire, latent in bodies, which escaped during combustion. The theory was finally abandoned when it was found that elements gained in weight on burning.

PHOCAS, a common soldier who raised himself by the aid of a faction to the throne of the East, and for twenty years defied attempts to dethrone him, but being deserted by his party was taken, subjected to torture, and beheaded in 610. "His reign," says Gibbon, "afflicted Europe with ignominious peace, and Asia with desolating war."

PHOCION, a distinguished Athenian general and statesman, a disciple of Plato and Xenocrates; was wise in council as well as brave in war; he was opposed to the democracy of Athens, led on by Demosthenes in the frantic ambition of coping with Philip of Macedon and his son Alexander, and pleaded for a pacific arrangement with them; but having opposed war with Antipater, the successor of the latter, he was accused of treason, and condemned to drink hemlock; the Athenians afterwards repented of the crime, raised a bronze statue to his memory, and condemned his accuser to death.

PHOCIS, a province of ancient Greece, W. of Boeotia and N. of the Gulf of Corinth; was traversed by the mountain range of Parnassus, and contained the oracle of Apollo at Delphi; allied to Athens in the Peloponnesian War, the Phocians were crushed in the "Sacred War" after ten years' fighting by Philip of Macedon, 346 B.C.

PHOEBUS (i.e. Apollo, the radiant one), an epithet originally applied to Apollo for his beauty, and eventually to him as the sun-god.

PHENICIA, a country on the E. shore of the Levant, stretching inland to Mount Lebanon, at first extending only 20 m. N. of Palestine, but later embracing 200 m. of coast, with the towns of Tyre, Zarephath, Sidon, Gebel, and Arvad. The country comprised well-wooded hills and fertile plains, was rich in natural resources, richer still in a people of remarkable industry and enterprise. Of Semitic stock, they emerge from history with Sidon as ruling city about 1600 B.C., and reach their zenith under Tyre 1200-750, thereafter declining, and ultimately merging in the Roman Empire. During their prosperity their manufactures, purple dye, glass ware, and metal implements were in demand everywhere; they were the traders of the world, their nautical skill and geographical position making their markets the centres of exchange between East and West; their ships sailed every sea, and carried the merchandise of every country, and their colonists settled all over the Mediterranean, Aegean, and Euxine, and even beyond the Pillars of Hercules, in Africa, in Britain, and the countries on the Baltic. Her greatest colony was Carthage, the founding of which (823 B.C.) sapped the strength of the mother-country, and which afterwards usurped her place, and contended with Rome for the mastery of the world. But Phoenicia's greatest gift to civilisation was the alphabet, which she herself may have developed from Egyptian hieroglyphics, and which, with its great merit of simplicity, has, slightly altered, at length superseded among civilised nations every other system.

PHOENIX, a bird which was fabled at the end of certain cycles of time to immolate itself in flames, and rise renewed in youth from the ashes. It has become the appropriate symbol of the death-birth that ever introduces a new era in the history of the world.

PHOENIX PARK, a magnificent public park of 2000 acres in Dublin; is much used for military reviews; it was rendered notorious in 1882 through the murder by the "Invincibles" of Lord Frederick Cavendish, who had just been appointed Irish Secretary, and his subordinate, Thomas Burke.

PHONOGRAPH, an instrument which was invented by Edison (q.v.) in 1877 for recording and reproducing articulate sounds of the voice in speech or song, and to which the name of phonogram was given.

PHOSGENE, or carbonyl chloride, a poisonous gas produced from chlorine and carbon monoxide; it is formed when chloroform is exposed to air and sunlight; to prevent this a small amount of alcohol is frequently added to chloroform; phosgene was used as an asphyxiating gas in the Great War.

PHOSPHORESCENCE, the phenomenon that certain substances after exposure to light continue to emit light when placed in the dark; luminous paint is composed of the sulphides of calcium and barium, which are phosphorescent substances.

PHOSPHORUS, an element first obtained from urine by Brand of Hamburg in 1669; exists in the allotropic forms: white, a waxy, poisonous substance which takes fire in the air and is luminous; and red, which is not luminous and does not take fire so easily; phosphorus is used for matches; in the case of safety matches red phosphorus enters into the composition of the preparation on the side of the box; phosphorus is obtained from the phosphates found as minerals and in the ash of burnt bone.

PHOTIUS, patriarch of Constantinople; was the great promoter of the schism on the question of the procession of the Holy Ghost, between the Eastern and the Western divisions of the Church, denying as he did, and erasing from the creed, the Misgue article (q.v.); d. 891.

PHOTOELECTRIC EFFECT, the phenomenon that certain metals emit electrons when illuminated by ultra-violet light.

PHOTOGRAPHURE, a process of reproducing pictures from the negative of a photograph on a gelatine surface with the assistance of certain chemical preparations.

PHOTOMETRE, an instrument for comparing the luminosities of two sources of light.

PHOTOSPHERE, name given to the luminous atmosphere enveloping the sun.

PHOTOSYNTHESIS, the building up of carbohydrates from carbon dioxide in plants in the presence of sunlight; the chlorophyll in the green leaves is the active agent in the process.

PHOTOTYPE, a block with impressions produced by photography from which engravings, &c., can be printed.

PHRENOLOGY, claims to be a science in which the relation of the functions of mind to the material of the brain substance is observed. It asserts that just as speech, taste, touch, &c., have their centres in certain convolutions of the brain, so have benevolence, firmness, conscientiousness, &c., and that by studying the configuration of the brain, as indicated by that of the skull, a man's character may be approximately discovered. As a science it is usually discredited, and held to be unsupported by physiology, anatomy, and pathology. It is held as strongly militating against its claims that it takes no account of the convolutions of the brain that lie on the base of the skull. Its originators were Combe, Spurzheim, and Andrew and George Combe.

PHYRGIA, a country originally extending over the western shores of Asia Minor, but afterwards confined to the western uplands, where are the sources of the Hermus, Meander, and Sangarius; was made up of barren hills, where sheep famous for their wool grazed, and fertile valleys, where the vine was cultivated; marble was quarried in the hills, and gold was found; several great trade roads from Ephesus crossed the country, among whose towns the names of Colossae and Laodicea are familiar; the Phrygians were an Armenian people, with a mystic orlagic religion, and were successively conquered by Assyrians, Lydians, and Persians, falling under Rome in 43 B.C.

PHYRGIAN CAP, a cap worn by the Phrygians, and worn in modern times as the symbol of freedom.

PHYRYNE, a Greek courtesan, celebrated for her beauty; was the model to Praxiteles of his statue of Venus, and was painted by Apelles as Aphrodite Anadromene; accused of profaning the Eleusinian Mysteries, she was brought before the judges, to whom she exposed her person, and was acquitted of the charge, to preserve to the artists the image of divine beauty thus recognised in her.

PILLAR-SAINTS, a class of recluses, called Stylites, who, in early Christian times, retired from the world to the Syrian Desert, and, perched on pillars, used to spend days and nights in fasting and praying, in the frantic belief that by mortification of their bodies they would ensure the salvation of their souls; their founder was Simon, surnamed Stylites; the practice, which was never allowed in the West, continued down to the 12th century.

PILLARS OF HERCULES. See HERCULES, PILLARS OF.

PILLORY, an obsolete instrument of punishment for centuries in use all over Europe, consisted of a platform, an upright pole, and at a convenient height cross-boards with holes, in which the culprit's neck and wrists were placed and fastened; so fixed, he was exposed in some public place to the insults and noxious missiles of the mob. Formerly in England the penalty of forgery, perjury, &c., it became after the Commonwealth a favourite punishment for seditious libellers. It was last inflicted in London in 1830, and was abolished by law in 1837.

PILLOTY, KARL VON, a modern German painter of the Munich school, and professor of Painting at the Munich Academy; did portraits, but his masterpieces are on historical subjects, such as "Nero Among the Ruins of Rome," "Galileo in Prison," "The Death of Caesar," &c.; he was no less eminent as a teacher of art than as an artist (1826-1886).

PILSEN, a town in Czechoslovakia, 67 m. SW. of Prague; has numerous industries, and rich coal and iron mines, and produces an excellent beer, which it exports in large quantities. It was an important place during the Thirty Years' War.

PILSUDSKI, JOSEPH, Polish general and politician. Born in Vilna, he took early to the military life, organised an army in Poland early this century, and in the Great War led one in support of the Central Powers. When Poland became an independent country in 1918 he was a prominent politician, and led an unsuccessful attack on Russia in 1920, after which he resigned all his posts; in 1926 he took up politics again and became virtual dictator of Poland (1868-).

PILTDOWN MAN, or Eoanthropus Dawsoni, remains of which were found in 1912 at Piltown in Sussex by Charles Dawson, is generally considered as a species of sub-man who lived in the Second or Third Interglacial Period (i.e. some 300,000 years ago). The remains included the walls of the skull, a tooth, and part of the lower jaw; it is definitely earlier than the remains of paleolithic age.

PINDAR, the greatest lyric poet of Greece, and for virgin purity of imagination ranked by Ruskin with Homer, Virgil, Dante, and Scott; born near Thebes, in Boeotia, of a noble and also musical family, and began his musical education by practice on the flute, while he was assisted in his art by the example of his countrywoman Corinna, who competed with and defeated him more than once at the public festivals; he was a welcome visitor at the courts of all the Greek princes of the period, and not the less honoured that he condescended to no flattery and attuned his lyre to no sentiment but what would find an echo in every noble heart; he excelled in every department of lyric poetry, hymns to the gods, the praises of heroes, poems of victory, choral songs, festival songs, and dirges, but of these only a few remain, his Epinikia, a collection of triumphal odes in celebration of the successes achieved at the great national games of Greece; he was not only esteemed the greatest of lyric poets by his countrymen, but is without a rival still; when Alexander destroyed Thebes he spared the house of Pindar (522-442 B.C.).

PINDAR, PETER. See WALCOT, JOHN.

PINDARESS, or PINDARIS, a set of freebooters who at the beginning of the last century ravaged Central India and were the terror of the districts, but who under the governor-generalship of Hastings were driven to bay and crushed in 1817.

PIOZZI, HESTER, a female friend of Johnson under the name of Mrs. Thrale, after her first husband, a brewer in Southwark, whose home for her sake was the rendezvous of all the literary celebrities of the period; married afterwards, to Johnson's disgust, Piozzi, an Italian music-master, lived with him at Florence, and returned at his death to Clifton, where she died; left "Anecdotes of Johnson" and "Letters"; was authoress of "The Three Warnings" (1741-1821).

PIPE OF PEACE, or Calumet, a pipe offered by an American Indian to one with whom he wishes to be on good terms.

PIREUS, the port of Athens 5 m. SW. of the city, planned by Themistocles, built in the time of Pericles, and afterwards connected with the city for safety by strong walls; it was destroyed by the Spartans at the end of the Peloponnesian War, but restored, to fall afterwards into neglect and ruins.

PIRANO, a seaport on the Adriatic, 12 m. SW. of Trieste; has salt-works in the neighbourhood, and manufactures glass and soap.

PIRITHOUS, king of the Lapiths and friend of Theseus, on the occasion of whose marriage an intoxicated Centaur ran off with his bride Hippodamia, which gave rise to the famous fight between the Centaurs and the Lapiths, in which Theseus assisted, and the former were defeated; on the death of Hippodamia, Pirithous ran off with Persephone and Theseus with Helen, for which both had to answer in the lower world before Pluto; Hercules delivered the latter, but Pluto would not release the former.

PIRKE ABOTH (i.e. sayings of the Fathers), the name given to a collection of aphorisms in the manner of Jesus the Son of Sirach by 60 doctors learned in the Jewish law, representatives of their teaching, and giving the gist of it; they inculcate the importance of familiarity with the words of the Law.

PIRNA, a town in Saxony, on the Elbe, 11 m. SE. of Dresden; has sandstone quarries in the neighbourhood.

PISA, on the Arno, 49 m. by rail W. of Florence, is one of the oldest cities in Italy; formerly a port, the river has built up the land at its mouth so that the sea is now 4 m. off, and the ancient trade of Pisa has been transferred to Leghorn. There are a magnificent cathedral, rich in art treasures, a peculiar campanile of white marble which deviates 14 ft. from the perpendicular, known as the Leaning Tower of Pisa, several old and beautiful churches, a university, school of art, and library. Silks and ribbons are woven, and coral ornaments cut. In the 11th century Pisa was at the zenith of its prosperity as a republic, with a great mercantile fleet, and commercial relations with all the world. Its Ghibelline sympathies involved it in terrible struggles, in which it gradually sank till its fortunes were merged in those of Tuscany about 1550. The council of Pisa, 1409, held to determine the long-standing rival claims of Gregory XII. and Benedict XII. to the Papal chair, ended by adding a third claimant, Alexander V. Pisa was one of the twelve cities of ancient Etruria.

PISANO, NICOLA, Italian sculptor and architect of Pisa; his most famous works are the pulpit in the Baptistery at Pisa, and that for the Duomo at Siena, the last being the fountain in the piazza of Perugia (1206-1278).

PITRIS (i.e. Fathers), in the Hindu mythology an order of divine beings, and equal to the greatest of the gods, who, by their sacrifice, delivered the world from chaos, gave birth to the sun and kindled the stars, and in whose company the dead, who have like them lived self-sacrificingly, enter when they lay aside mortality. See Rev. vii. 14.

PITSCOTTIE, ROBERT LINDSAY OF, proprietor in the 16th century of the Piffshire estate the name of which he bore; was the author of "The Chronicles of Scotland," to which Sir Walter Scott owed so much; his work is quaint, graphic, and, on the whole, trustworthy.

PITT, WILLIAM. See CHATHAM, EARL OF.

PITT, WILLIAM, English statesman, second son of Lord Chatham, born near Bromley, Kent, grew up a delicate child in a highly-charged political atmosphere, and studied with such diligence under the direction of his father and a tutor that he entered Cambridge at 14; called to the bar in 1780, he speedily threw himself into politics, and contested Cambridge University in the election of 1781; though defeated, he took his seat for the pocket borough of Appleby, joined the Shelburne Tories in opposition to North's ministry, and was soon a leader in the House at the age of 21; he supported, but refused to join, the Rockingham Ministry of 1782, contracted his long friendship with Dundas, afterwards Viscount Melville, and became an advocate of parliamentary reform; his first office was Chancellor of the Exchequer under Lord Shelburne; his reputation steadily rose, but on Shelburne's resignation he refused the Premiership, and went into opposition against the Portland, Fox, and North coalition; that minority being defeated (1783) on their Indian policy by the direct and unconstitutional interference of the King, he courageously formed a government with a majority of 100 against him at the age of 24; refusing to yield to adverse votes, he gradually won over the House and the country, and the dissolution of 1784 gave a majority of 120 in his favour, and put him in office, one of England's strongest ministers; during his long administration, broken only for one month in 20 years, he greatly raised the importance of the Commons, stamped out direct corruption in the House, and abolished many sinecures; he revised taxation, improved the collection of revenue and the issue of loans, and set the finances in a flourishing condition; he reorganised the government of India, and aimed strenuously to keep England at peace; but his abandonment of parliamentary reform and the abolition of the slave-trade suggest that he loved power rather than principles; his Poor-Law schemes and Sinking Fund were unsound; he failed to appreciate the problems presented by the growth of the factory system, or to manage Ireland with any success; on the outbreak of the French Revolution he failed to understand its significance, did not anticipate a long war, and made bad preparations and had schemes; his vacillation in Irish policy induced the rebellion of 1798; by corrupt measures he carried the legislative union of 1801, but the King refused to allow the Catholic emancipation he promised as a condition; Viscount Melville was driven from the Admiralty on a charge of malversation, his own health broke down, and the victory of Trafalgar scarcely served to brighten his closing days; given to deep drinking, and culpably careless of his private moneys, he yet lived a pure, simple, amiable life; with an overcharged dignity, he was yet an attractive man and a warm friend; England has had few statesmen equal to him in the handling of financial and commercial problems, and few orators more fluent and persuasive than the great peace minister (1769-1806).

PITT DIAMOND, a diamond brought from Golconda by the grandfather of the elder Pitt, who sold it to the king of France; it figured at length in the hit of the State sword of Napoleon, and was carried off by the Prussians at Waterloo.

PITTACUS, one of the seven sages of Greece, born in Mitylene, in Lesbos, in the 7th century B.C.; celebrated as a warrior, a statesman, a philosopher, and a poet; expelled the tyrants from Mitylene, and held the supreme power for 10 years after by popular vote, but resigned on the establishment of social order; two proverbs are connected with his name: "It is difficult to be good," "Know the fit time."

PITTSBURGH, second city of Pennsylvania, is 350 mi. by rail W. of Philadelphia, where the junction of the Alleghany and the Monongahela Rivers forms the Ohio; the city extends for 10 miles along the rivers' banks, and climbs up the surrounding hills; there are handsome public buildings and churches, efficient schools, a Roman Catholic college, and a Carnegie library; domestic lighting and heating and much manufacture are done by natural gas, which issues at high pressure from shallow borings in isolated districts 20 in. from the city; standing in the centre of an extraordinary coal-field—the edges of the horizontal seams protrude on the hillsides—it is the largest coal-market in the States; manufactures include all iron goods, steel and copper, glassware, and earthenware; its position at the eastern limit of the Mississippi basin, its facilities of transport by river and rail—six trunk railroads meet here—give it enormous trade advantages; its transcontinental business is second in volume only to Chicago; in early times the British colonists had many struggles with the French for this vantage point; a fort built by the British Government in 1759, and called after the elder Pitt, was the nucleus of the city.

PITYRIASIS, a skin eruption attended with bran-like desquamation.

PIUS, the name of eleven Popes, of whom eight call for particular mention: P. II, Pope from 1458 to 1464, was of the family of the Piccolomini, and is known to history as Eneas Sylvius, under which name he did good diplomatic work in Britain and Germany; as Pope he succeeded Callistus III.; he was a wily potentate, and is distinguished for organising a crusade against the Turks as well as his scholarship; the works which survive him are of a historical character, and his letters are of great value. P. IV., from 1559 to 1568, was of humble birth; during his popehood the deliberations of the Council of Trent were brought to a close, and the Tridentine Creed was named after him. P. V., Pope 1566 to 1572, also of humble birth, was severe in his civil and ecclesiastical capacity, both in his internal administration and foreign relationships, and thought to browbeat the world back into the bosom of Mother Church; issued a bull releasing Queen Elizabeth's subjects from their allegiance; but the great event of his reign, and to which he contributed, was the naval victory over the Turks at Lepanto in 1571. P. VI., Pope from 1775 to 1799; the commencement of his popehood was signalled by beneficent measures for the benefit of the Roman city, but he was soon in trouble in consequence of encroachments on Church privileges in Austria and the confiscation of all Church property in France, which ended, on his resisting to still further outrages, in his capture by the French under Bonaparte and his expatriation from Rome. P. VII., Pope from 1800 to 1823, concluded a concordat with France, crowned Napoleon emperor at Paris, who thereafter annexed the papal territories to the French empire, which were in part restored to Rome only after Napoleon's fall. P. IX., or Pío Nono, from 1846 to 1878, was a "reforming" Pope, and by his concessions awoke in 1848 a spirit of revolution, under the force of which he was compelled to flee from Rome, to return again under the protection of French bayonets against his own subjects, to devote himself to purely ecclesiastical affairs; in 1854 he promulgated the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, and in 1859 the Infallibility of the Pope; upon the outbreak of the Franco-German War in 1871 the French troops were withdrawn and Victor Emmanuel's troops entered the city; Pius retired into the Vatican, where he lived in seclusion till his death. P. X., from 1903 to 1914. P. XI., born near Milan, became Pope in 1922, and in 1929 signed the Lateran Treaty (q.v.), under which the temporal power of the Papacy was restored, sovereignty over the Vatican City being recognised (1864-).

PLANETOIDES. See ASTEROIDS.

PLANETS, bodies resembling the earth and of different sizes, which revolve in elliptical orbits round the sun, and at different distances, the chief of them eight in number, two of them, viz., Mercury and Venus, revolving in orbits interior to that of the earth, and five of them, viz., Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, exterior, the whole with the asteroids (q.v.) and comets constituting the solar system.

PLANKTON, name given to microscopic organisms inhabiting the seas, e.g. radiolarians, foraminifera, diatoms; the ooze found at the bottom of the oceans consists largely of the remains of these animals and plants, e.g. globigerina ooze.

PLANTAGENETS, the name attached to a dynasty of kings of England, who reigned from the extinction of the Norman line to the accession of the Tudor, that is, from the beginning of Henry II.'s reign in 1154 to the end of Richard III.'s on Bosworth Field in 1485. The name was adopted by Geoffrey of Anjou, the husband of Matilda, the daughter of Henry I., whose badge was a sprig of broom (which the name denotes), and which he wore in his bonnet as descended from the Earl of Anjou, who was by way of penance scourged with twigs of it at Jerusalem.

PLANTIN, CHRISTOPHE, a printer of Antwerp, born near Tours, in France; celebrated for the beauty and accuracy of the work that issued from his press, the most notable being the "Antwerp Polyglot"; he had printing establishments in Leyden and Paris, as well as Antwerp, all these conducted by sons-in-law (1514-1589).

PLASSEY, a great battlefield in Bengal, now swept away by changes in the course of the river, scarcely 100 m. N. of Calcutta; was the scene of Clive's victory in 1757 with 800 Europeans and 2200 unreliable native troops over Suraj-ud-Dowlah, the ruler of Bengal, which laid that province at the feet of Britain and led to the foundation of the British Empire in India.

PLASTER OF PARIS, anhydrous sulphate of lime, which sets to a hard paste when mixed with water.

PLATÆA, a city of ancient Greece, in western Boeotia, neighbour and ally of Athens, suffered greatly in the Persian and Peloponnesian Wars. It was destroyed by the Persians 480 B.C., by the Peloponnesian forces 429 B.C., and again by the Thebans 387 B.C. Philip of Macedon restored the exiles to their homes in 338 B.C.

PLATINUM, a heavy metal found in Russia, used for jewellery and for certain pieces of apparatus for chemical purposes; it is used as a catalyst for some reactions, e.g. the production of sulphuric acid by the contact process.

PLATO, the great philosopher, born in Athens, of noble birth, the year Pericles died, and the second of the Peloponnesian War; at 20 became a disciple of Socrates, and passed eight years in his society; at 30, after the death of Socrates, quitted Athens, and took up his abode at Megara; from Megara he travelled to Cyrene, Egypt, Magna Græcia, and Sicily, prolonging his stay in Magna Græcia, and studying under Pythagoras, whose philosophy was then at its prime and was exercising a profound influence over him; after ten years' wandering in this way, at the age of 40 he returned to Athens, and founded his Academy, a gymnasium outside the city, with a garden, which belonged to his father, and where he gathered around him a body of disciples and had Aristotle for one of his pupils, lecturing there with undiminished mental power till he reached the advanced age of 80; of his philosophy one can give no account here, or indeed anywhere, it was so unsectarian; he was by pre-eminence the world-thinker, and though he was never married and left no son, he has all the thinking men and schools of philosophy in the world as his offspring; enough to say that his philosophy took up in its embrace both the ideal and the real, at once the sensible and the supersensible world (427-347 B.C.).

PLATOFF, MATVEI IVANOVICH, COUNT, hetman of Cossacks, and Russian commander in the Napoleonic wars; took part in the campaigns of 1805-1807, and scourged the French during their retreat from Moscow in 1812, and again after their defeat at Leipzig, 1813; he commanded at the victory of Altenburg, 1813, and for his services obtained the title of count (1781-1818).

PLATONIC LOVE, love between persons of different sexes, in which as being love of soul for soul and sexual passion intermingles; is so named probably to the doctrine of Plato, that a man finds his highest happiness when he falls in with another who is his soul's counterpart or complement.

PLUTARCH, celebrated Greek biographer and moralist, born in Chaeronea, in Boeotia; studied at Athens; paid frequent visits to Rome, and formed friendships with some of its distinguished citizens; spent his later years at his native place, and held a priesthood; his fame rests on his "Parallel Lives" of 46 distinguished Greeks and Romans, a series of portraits true to the life, and one of the most valuable works we possess on the illustrious men of antiquity (circ. 50-120).

PLUTO, god of the nether world, son of Kronos and Rhea, brother of Zeus and Poseidon, and husband of Persephone; on the dechronement of Kronos the universe was divided among themselves by the three brothers, Zeus assuming the dominion of the upper world and Poseidon that of the ocean, leaving the nether kingdom to Pluto, a domain over which he ruled with a greater and more undisputed authority than the other two over heaven, earth, and sea.

PLUTONIC ROCKS, name given to those igneous rocks which consolidated at a great depth and have been exposed as the result of the denudation of the overlying deposits or of earth movements, e.g. granites, gabbros and diorites.

PLUTUS, the god of riches, son of Jason and Demeter. Zeus is said to have put out his eyes that he might bestow his gifts without respect to merit, that is, on the evil and the good impartially.

PLYMOUTH, the largest town in Devonshire, stands on the N. shore of Plymouth Sound, 250 m. W. of London by rail; adjacent to it are the towns of Stonehouse and Devonport. Among the chief buildings are a Gothic town hall, a 15th-century church, and a Roman Catholic cathedral. The chief industry is chemical manufactures. There is a large coasting and general trade, and important fisheries. Many sea-going steamship companies make it a place of call. The Sound is an important naval station, and historically famous as the sailing port of the fleet that vanquished the Armada, and of the Mayflower with the Pilgrim Fathers.

PLYMOUTH BRETHREN, an antipapal body of Christians, one of the earliest communities of which was formed in Plymouth about 1830; they accept, along with pre-Millennarian views, generally the Calvinistic view of the Christian religion, and exclude all unconverted men from their communion, while all included in the body are of equal standing and enjoy equal privileges as members of Christ's church. They are known also by the name of Darbyites (q.v.) from the name of one of their founders, a barrister, John Nelson Darby, an able man, and with all his exclusiveness a sincere disciple of Christ (1800-1882).

PNEUMONIA, name given to acute inflammation of the lungs.

PO, the largest river in Italy, rises 6000 ft. above sea-level in the Cottian Alps, and after 20 m. of rocky defiles emerges on the great Lombardy plain, which it crosses from W. to E., receiving the Ticino, Adda, Mincio, and Trebbia tributaries, and enters the Adriatic by a rapidly growing delta. Its total course is 360 m.; the width and volume of its stream make it difficult to cross and so constitute it a protection to all Italy. The chief towns on its banks are Turin, Piacenza, and Cremona.

POCAHONTAS, the daughter of an Indian chief in Virginia, who favoured the English settlers there, saving the life of Captain Smith the coloniser; she afterwards married John Rolfe, one of the settlers, came to England, and was presented at Court; several Virginian families trace their descent to her; d. at Gravesend, 1617.

POCKET BOROUGH, a borough in which the influence of some magnate of the place determines the voting at an election time, a thing of the past.

POITOU, formerly a province in France, lying S. of the Loire, between the Vienne River and the sea; passed to England when its countess, Eleanor, married Henry I., 1152; was taken by Philip Augustus 1206, ceded to England again 1360, and retaken by Charles V. 1369.

POLA, an old naval station and dockyard, 73 m. S. of Trieste, in the Adriatic; the harbour is both spacious and deep; was originally a Roman colony, and a flourishing seat of commerce.

POLAND, as one of the results of the Great War, regained its independence and is now a republic of 300,000 sq. m. situated between the Baltic, Lithuania, Russia, the Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, and Germany; the capital is Warsaw, where the republic was proclaimed in November, 1918. The country is fertile; great crops of cereals are raised; there are forests of pine and oak, and extensive pasture lands; vast salt-mines are wrought at Cracow; silver, iron, copper, and lead in other parts. Poland took rank among European powers in the 10th century under Miecyslaw, its first Christian king. During the 12th and 13th centuries it sank to the rank of a duchy. In 1241 the Mongols devastated the country, and thereafter colonies of Germans and Jewish refugees settled among the Slav population. The first Diet met in 1331, and Casimir the Great, 1333-1370, raised the country to a high level of prosperity, fostering the commerce of Danzig and Cracow. The dynasty of the Jagellons united Lithuania to Poland, ended two centuries' contest with the Teutonic knights, and yielded to the nobles such privileges as turned the kingdom into an oligarchy and elective monarchy. At the time of the Reformation Poland was the leading power in Eastern Europe. The new doctrines gained ground there in spite of severe persecution. Warsaw became the capital in 1599. The power and arrogance of the nobles grew; the necessity for unanimity in the votes of the Diet gave them a weapon to stop all progress and all correction of their own malpractices. Sigismund III. made unsuccessful attempts to seize the crowns of Russia and Sweden. In the middle of the 17th century a terrible struggle against Russia, Sweden, Brandenburg, and the Cossacks ended in the complete defeat of Poland, and wars with the Turks, dissensions among her own nobles, quarrels at the election of every king, the continuance of serfdom, and the persecution of the adherents of the Greek Church and the Protestants, rendered her condition more and more deplorable. Austria, Russia, and Prussia began to interfere in her affairs. She was unfortunate in her choice of kings, and in the second half of the 18th century she was without natural boundaries, and Frederick the Great started the idea of partition. The first seizure of territory by the three interfering powers took place in 1772. A movement for reform reorganised the Diet, improved the condition of the serfs, established religious toleration, and promulgated a new constitution in 1791; but a party of unpatriotic nobles resented it, and laid the country open to a second seizure of territory by Prussia and Russia in 1793. The Poles now made a desperate stand under Kosciuszko, but their three powerful neighbours were too strong, and the final partition of Poland between them took place in 1795. The Congress of Vienna rearranged the division in 1816, and reconstituted the Russian portion as a kingdom, with the Czar as king; but discontent broke into rebellion, and led to the final repression of independence in 1832, which lasted until 1918.

POLARISCOPE, an instrument for investigating the effect of an optically active substance upon a beam of polarised light.

FOLDERS, low marshy lands in Holland and Belgium, drained and reclaimed from sea or river; they form an important part of the former, and are conspicuous from the verdure they display; they include nearly 150 acres of good land, the largest being that of Haarlem Meer, which is 70 square miles in extent and was drained by steam.

POLE, the name given to the extremities of the imaginary axis of the earth, round which it revolves.

POLE, REGINALD, cardinal, archbishop of Canterbury, born in Stourton Castle, Staffordshire, of royal blood; studied at Oxford; took holy orders, and was appointed to various benefices by Henry VIII., who held him in high favour; but he opposed the project of divorcing Catherine, and was driven from the royal presence and deprived of his power; elected to the cardinalate by the Pope, he tried to return after Henry's death, but was not received back till Mary's accession, when he came as Papal legate, and was appointed Archbishop of Canterbury after the death of Crammer, whom he refused to supersede so long as the latter lived; he was not obsequious enough to the Pope, and his legation was cancelled; the Queen's illness accelerated his own end, and he died the day after her; he has been charged with abetting the Marian persecution, but it is highly questionable how far he was answerable for it (1500-1558).

POLE-STAR, or POLARIS, a star in the northern hemisphere, in Ursa Minor, the nearest conspicuous one to the N. pole of the heavens, from which it is at present 1° distant; a straight line joining the two "pointers" in Ursa Major passes nearly through it.

POLICE, the civil body existing to guard life and property. Until 1829 their duties in London were carried out by watchmen, but in that year Sir Robert Peel founded the Metropolitan Police, a system soon copied in the provinces. In London there are now some 20,000 members of the force, which has its headquarters at Scotland Yard.

POLIGNAC, PRINCE DE, French statesman, born in Versailles, of an old noble family, prime minister of Charles X., to whose fall he contributed by his arbitrary measures; in attempting flight at the Revolution was captured and sentenced to death, which was converted into banishment; he was allowed to return at length (1780-1847).

POLITIAN, ANGELO, or Poliziano, eminent Italian scholar, born in Tuscany, his family name being Ambrogini; was patronised by Lorenzo de' Medici; professor of Greek and Latin at the university of Florence, his fame in this capacity drew to his class students from all parts of Europe; he did much to forward the Renaissance movement, and was distinguished as a poet no less than as a scholar; he became a priest towards the close of his life (1454-1494).

POLIZIANO. See POLITIAN.

POLK, JAMES KNOX, eleventh President of the United States, of Irish descent; admitted to the bar in 1820, entered Congress in 1825, and became President in 1844, his term of office being signalled by the annexation of Texas and California (1795-1849).

POLLIO, GAIUS ASINIUS, orator, historian, and poet, born in Rome; sided with Cæsar against Pompey, and after the death of the former, with Antony; was a patron of letters and the friend of Virgil and Horace, both of whom dedicated poems to him; he was the first to establish a public library in Rome (76 B.C. to A.D. 4).

POLLOCK, SIR EDWARD, an eminent English judge, born in London, contemporary of Brougham, a Tory in politics, represented Huntington, was twice made Attorney-General, became Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1844, and made a baronet on his retirement from the bench (1788-1870).

POLLOCK, SIR ERNEST MURRAY (Lord Hanworth), British lawyer and politician. He entered the House of Commons in 1910, became Solicitor-General in 1919, Attorney-General in 1922, and Master of the Rolls in 1923 (1861-).

POLLOCK, SIR FREDERICK, British lawyer. Called to the bar in 1871, he became a professor at London University, and later at the Inns of Court. He was made an Admiralty judge in 1914, and has written extensively on law (1845-).

POLLOCK, SIR GEORGE, field-marshal, born in Westminster, brother of Sir Edward Pollock (q.v.); distinguished himself in Nepal and the Afghan War; in the latter forced the Khyber Pass, defeated Akbar Khan, and relieved Sir Robert Sale, who was shut up in Jellalabad (1786-1872).

POLLOCK, ROBERT, Scottish poet, born in Renfrewshire; bred for the Secession Church, wrote one poem, "The Course of Time," in 10 books, on the spiritual life and human destiny, which was published when he was dying of consumption, a complaint accelerated. It is believed, by his studious habits (1799-1827).

PORTIA, the rich heiress in "The Merchant of Venice," whose destiny in marriage depended, as ordained by her father, on the discretion of the wooer to choose the one of the three caskets that contained her portrait.

PORTLAND, (1) the largest city and principal seaport of Maine, stands on a peninsula in Casco Bay, 106 m. NE. of Boston by rail. It has extensive wharves, dry-docks, and grain-elevators, engineer shops, shoe-factories, and sugar-refineries. Settled as an English colony in 1632, it was ravaged by fire in 1866. Longfellow was born here. (2) largest city in Oregon, on the Willamette River, nearly 800 m. N. of San Francisco; is a handsome city, with numerous churches and schools; there are iron-foundries, mechanics' shops, canneries, and flour-mills; railway communication connects it with St. Paul and Council Bluffs, and, the river being navigable for deep-sea steamers, it is a thriving port of entry.

PORTLAND, ISLE OF, a rocky peninsula in the SW. of Dorsetshire, connected by Chesil Bank and the Mainland; is famous as the source of great quantities of fine building limestone; here is also a convict-prison opened 1848, accommodating 1500 prisoners.

PORTLAND VASE, an ancient cinerary urn of dark blue glass ornamented with Greco-Egyptian figures carved in a layer of white enamel, found near Rome about 1640, and in the possession of the Portland family in 1787; it is now in the British Museum. In 1845 the vase was broken by a lunatic, but it was skillfully restored. In 1929 it was put up for sale by auction, but not finding a high enough bidder it was returned to the Museum. It is ten inches high and seven inches round.

PORTO RICO, a West Indian island, half the size of Wales, 75 m. E. of Hayti, is well watered and very fertile. Ranges of hills run from E. to W., and are covered with valuable timber. Sugar, coffee, and rice are the principal crops; tobacco and tropical fruits are grown; cattle and horses are reared. Textile goods, hardware, and provisions are imported; the exports are sugar, coffee, tobacco, and cattle. The capital is St. John's, Mayaguez and Ponce the other towns. The island was discovered by Columbus, who called it Hispaniola, in 1493. Colonised by Spain in 1510, it attempted unsuccessfully to gain independence in 1820-1823. The abolition of slavery in 1873, and the growth of population, marked the remainder of its history as a Spanish colony. It was seized by the United States in the war of 1898.

PORTOBELLO, a Midlothian watering-place on the Firth of Forth, 3 m. E. of Edinburgh, with which it is now incorporated for municipal purposes; has a fine esplanade and promenade pier, and manufactures of pottery, bricks, and bottles.

PORTSMOUTH, the most important British naval station, a seaport and market town, is situated on Portsea Island, on the coast of Hants, 15 m. SE. of Southampton. It is an unimposing town, but strongly fortified. St. Thomas' and Garrison Chapel are old churches with historical associations. The naval dockyards contain 12 docks lined with masonry, vast store-houses, wood-mills, anchor-forges, and building-ships. Some of the docks are roofed over, as also is a large building-ship on which four vessels may be constructed at once. The harbour can receive the largest war-vessels, and in Spithead roadstead 1000 ships can anchor at once. The trade of Portsmouth is dependent on the dockyards. It owes its defences to Edward IV., Elizabeth, and William III. It was the scene of Buckingham's assassination and of the loss of the Royal George. Three novelists were born here—Dickens, Meredith, and Besant.

PORTSMOUTH, (1) largest city of New Hampshire, and only seaport in the State, on the Piscataqua River, 3 m. from the ocean; is by rail 57 m. NE. of Boston, a handsome old town and favourite watering-place; near it is a U.S. navy-yard. (2) On the Ohio River, in Ohio; is the centre of an extensive iron industry. (3) Seaport and naval station on the Elizabeth River, Virginia.

PORTUGAL, a country as large as Ireland, bounded on the S. and W. by the Atlantic, on the N. and E. by Spain, from which at different places it is separated by the rivers Minho, Douro, Tagus, and Guadiana; consists of the Atlantic slopes of the great peninsular tableland, and has a moist, warm atmosphere, heavy rains, and frequent fogs. The above rivers and the Mondego traverse it; their valleys are fertile, the mountain slopes covered with forests. In the N. the oak abounds, in the centre the chestnut, in the S. cork-trees and palms. Agriculture, carried on with primitive implements, is the chief industry. Indian corn, wheat, and in the S. rice, are extensively grown; the vine yields the most valuable crops, but in the N. it is giving place to tobacco. There are a few textile factories. The largest export is wine; the others, cork, copper ore, and onions, which are sent to Great Britain, Brazil, and France. The principal imports, iron, textiles, and grain. The capital is Lisbon, on the Tagus, one of the finest towns in the world. Oporto, the chief manufacturing centre, and second city for commerce, is at the mouth of the Douro. Braga was once the capital. Coimbra, on the Mondego, is the rainiest place in Europe. There are good roads between the chief towns, 1200 m. of railway and 8000 m. of telegraph. The people are a mixed race, showing traces of Arab, Berber, and negro blood, with a predominance of northern strains. They are courteous and gentle; the peasantry hard-working and thrifty. Roman Catholic is the national faith, but they are tolerant of other religions. The language is closely akin to Spanish. Education is backward. The Government has been a republic since 1910, there being a President and two Chambers. The Azores and Madeira are part of the country; there are colonies in Africa and Asia, in which slavery was abolished only in 1878. The 14th and 15th centuries saw the zenith of Portugal's fortunes. At that time, in strict alliance with England, she raised herself by her enterprise to the foremost maritime and commercial power of Europe; her navigators founded Brazil and colonised India. Diaz in 1487 discovered and Vasco da Gama in 1497 doubled the Cape of Good Hope. In 1520 Magellan sailed round the world; but in the 16th century the extensive emigration, the expulsion of the Jews, the introduction of the Inquisition, and the spread of Jesuit oppression led to a steady downfall. For a time she was annexed to Spain. Regaining her independence she threw herself under the protection of England, her traditional friend, during the Napoleonic struggle.

POSEIDON, in the Greek mythology the god of the sea, a son of Kronos and Rhea, and brother of Zeus, Pluto, Hera, Hestia, and Demeter; had his home in the sea depths, on the surface of which he appeared with a long beard, seated in a chariot drawn by brazen-hoofed horses with golden manes, and wielding a trident, which was the symbol of his power, exercised in production of earthquake and storms. See NEPTUNE and PLUTO.

POSEN, a province of Poland, on the Russian frontier, bordered by Lithuania, Germany, and Czechoslovakia; belongs to the great North German plain; has several lakes, and is traversed by the navigable Warthe, Netze, and Vistula. The prevailing industry is agriculture; the crops are grain, potatoes, and hops; there are some manufactures of machinery and cloth. Half the population are Poles; except the Jews, most of the people are Catholics. The capital is Posen, on the Warthe, by rail 185 m. E. of Berlin. It is a pleasant town, with a cathedral, museum, and library, manufactures of manure and agricultural implements, breweries and distilleries. It is now a fortress of the first rank. Gnesen and Bromberg are the other chief towns.

POSIDONIUS, an eminent Stoic philosopher, born in Syria; established himself in Rhodes, where he rose to eminence; was visited by Cicero and Pompey, both of whom became his pupils; maintained that pain was no evil; "In vain, O Pain," he exclaimed one day under the pang of it. "In vain thou subtest me to torture; it is not in thee to extort from me the reproach that thou art an evil" (135-61 n.c.).

POSITIVE RAYS, or Canal rays, the positively charged particles emitted in the vacuum tube; they were first studied by Sir J. J. Thomson and later by Aston by means of the mass spectrograph.

POSITIVISM, the philosophy so called of Auguste Comte (q.v.), the aim of which is to propound a new arrangement of the sciences and a new theory of the evolution of science; the sciences he classes under the categories of abstract and concrete, and his law of evolution is that every department of knowledge passes in the history of it through three successive stages, and only in the last is it entitled to the name of science—the Theological stage, in which everything is referred to the intervention of the gods; the Metaphysical, in which everything is referred to an abstract idea; and the Positive, which, discarding at once theology and philosophy, contents itself with the study of phenomena and their sequence, and regards that as science proper. Thus is positivism essentially definable, in Dr. Stirling's words, as "a method which replaces all outlying agencies, whether Theological deities or Metaphysical entities, by Positive laws; which laws, and in their phenomenal relativity, as alone what can be known, ought alone to constitute what is sought to be known." See Dr. Stirling's "Schwegler."

POSSE COMITATUS, a Latin expression, signifies the whole coercive power of a county called out in the case of a riot, and embraces all males over 15 except peers, ecclesiastics, and infirm persons. These may be summoned by the sheriff to assist in maintaining the public peace, enforcing a writ, or capturing a felon; but usually the constabulary is sufficient for these duties.

PROLETARIAT, the name given to the lowest and poorest class in the State, and still retaining the original Roman meaning, as denoting, from proles, offspring, one who enriches the State not by his prosperity, but by his progeny.

PROMETHEUS (i.e. Forethought), a Titan, the son of Iapetus and Clymene, and the brother of Epimetheus (q.v.), who, when the gods just installed on Olympus, met with men at Mekone to arrange with them as to their dues in sacrifice, came boldly forth as the representative and protector of the human race and slew a bullock in sacrifice, putting the flesh of it in one pile and the entrails with the bones in another, veiled temptingly with fat, and invited Zeus to make his choice, whereupon, knowing well what he was about, Zeus chose the latter, but in revenge took away with him the fire which had been bestowed by the gods upon mortals. It was a strife of wit versus wit, and Prometheus, as the defender of the rights of man, was not to be outwitted even by the gods, so he reached up a hollow fennel stalk to the sun and brought the fire back again, whereupon the strife was transformed into one of force versus force, and Zeus caught the audacious Titan and chained him to a rock on Mount Caucasus, where an eagle gnawed all day at his liver which grew again by night, though, in inflicting this punishment, Zeus was soon visited with a relenting heart, for it was by express commission from him that Hercules, as a son of his, scaled the rock and slew the eagle. The myth is one of the deepest significance, reflecting an old belief, and one which has on it the seal of Christ, as sanctioned of Heaven, that the world was made for man and not man for the world, only there is included within it an expression of the jealousy with which Heaven watches the use mankind makes of the gifts that, out of her own special store, she bestows. Prometheus is properly the incarnation of the divine fire latent from the beginning in the soul of man.

PROOF SPIRIT, defined by Act of Parliament as alcohol of such strength as to have a density twelve-thirtieths that of water at 51° F.; it contains about 60 per cent. by volume of alcohol; all spirituous liquids are taxed by the amount of proof spirit in them; the term originated in the old test of applying a light to gunpowder, soaked in the spirit; if it caught fire the spirit was termed "over proof."

PROPAGANDA, a congregation, as it is called, at Rome, originated by Gregory XIII., and organised in 1622 by Gregory XV., the object of which is to propagate the faith of the Church among heathen nations and in countries where there is no established hierarchy, connected with which there is a college at Rome called the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide, where pupils are instructed for different fields of missionary enterprise.

PROPERTIUS, SEKTUS, a Latin elegiac poet, born in Umbria; went to Rome and became a protégé of Maecenas; devoted himself to the cultivation of the poetic art; came under the spell of a gifted lady, to whom, under the name of Cynthia, he dedicated the first products of his muse, and whom he has immortalized in his poems; in his elegies he follows Greek models; his poetry, and the poetic quality it displays, have been much admired by Goethe (51-14 B.C.).

PROPHECY, properly not a forecasting of particular events and the succession of them, but so far as it refers to the future at all is an insight into the course of things in the time to come from insight into the course of them in days gone by or now, and that is believed to be the character of Hebrew prophecy, founded on faith in the immutability of the divine order of things.

PROPHETS. See PROPHET, HEBREW PROPHECY. PROSELYTES, converts from heathenism to Judaism, of which there were two classes: Proselytes of the Temple, those who accepted the ceremonial law and were admitted into the inner court of the Temple; and Proselytes of the Gate, who accepted only the moral law, and were admitted only into the outer court. They were a numerous class after the Dispersion, and were reckoned at hundreds of thousands.

PROSERPINA, the daughter of Zeus and Demeter, who was carried off while gathering flowers by Pluto (q.v.), became Queen of Hades, and is represented as sitting on an ebony throne beside him wearing a crown. According to later tradition Pluto had to allow her to revisit the upper world for two-thirds of the year to compromise matters with her mother, her arrival being coincident with the beginning of spring and her return to Hades coincident with the beginning of winter. She became by Pluto the mother of the Furies.

PROSPERO, one of the chief characters in Shakespeare's "Tempest," an exiled king of Milan, who, during his exile, practices magic, and breaks his wand when he has accomplished his purpose.

PROTAGORAS, one of the earliest of the Greek Sophists, born in Abdera, who flourished in 440 B.C., and taught at Athens, from which city he was banished as a blasphemer, as having called in question the existence of the gods; he taught that man was the measure of all things, of those that exist, that they are; and of those things that do not exist, that they are not; and that there is nothing absolute, that all is an affair of subjective conception.

PROTECTION, name given to the encouragement of certain home products of a country by imposing duties on foreign products of the class, opposed to free-trade.

PROTEINS, complex nitrogenous compounds, essential components of all animal and vegetable organisms, e.g. gluten of flour and albumin of egg; plants are able to build up proteins from nitrogen compounds in the soil, but animals must obtain their proteins directly or indirectly from vegetable food; most plants are dependent upon the nitrates, &c., in the soil, which often have to be increased artificially by means of the application of sodium nitrate, ammonium salts, &c., but plants of the order Leguminosae (e.g. peas, beans, clover, lentils) contain bacteria which can manufacture proteins from the nitrogen of the air.

PROTESTANTISM, the name given to a movement headed by Luther in the 16th century, in protestation of the supremacy in spiritual things claimed by the Church of Rome, and made on the ground of the authority of conscience enlightened by the Word of God, conceived of as the ultimate revelation of God to man. In essence it is individual, while Catholicism is corporate.

PROTESTANTS, a name given to the adherents of Luther, who, at the second Diet of Spire in 1529, protested against the revocation of certain privileges granted at the first Diet in 1526.

PROTEUS, in the Greek mythology a divinity of the sea endowed with the gift of prophecy, but from whom it was difficult to extort the secrets of fate, as he immediately changed his shape when any one attempted to force him, for it was only in his proper form he could enunciate these secrets.

PROTOOL, a pact of compulsory arbitration and disarmament submitted to the League of Nations in 1924, but never generally ratified.

PROTOGENES, a Greek painter of the time of Alexander the Great, born in Caria; lived chiefly at Rhodes; was discovered by Apelles, who brought him into note; his masterpiece is a picture of Ialyssus, the tutelary hero of Rhodes, on which he spent seven years, and which he painted four times over.

PROTON, the elementary mass, with a charge of positive electricity, which forms the nucleus of the hydrogen atom.

PROTOPLASM, a name given to living matter forming the physical bases of all forms of animal and vegetable life.

PROUDHON, PIERRE JOSEPH, French Socialist, born in Besancon, the son of a cooper; worked in a printing establishment, spent his spare hours in study, especially of the social problem, and in 1839 published a work entitled "What is Property?" in which he boldly enunciated the startling proposition, "Property is theft"; for the publication of this thesis he was at first unmolested, and only with its application was he called to account, being at last, in 1849, committed to prison, where, however, he kept himself busy with his pen; from time to time he omitted socialist publications till his release in 1852, after which he was in 1858 compelled to flee the country, to return again under an act of amnesty in 1860 and die; he was not only the assailant of property, but of government itself, and preached anarchy as the goal of all social progress (1809-1865).

PROUST, MARCEL, French novelist, author of a series of novels called "la Recherche du Temps Perdu," the first of which was published in 1914 (1872-1922).

PROUT, FATHER. See MAHONY, FRANCIS.

PROUT, SAMUEL, English water-colour artist, born in Plymouth; had from a child an irrepressible penchant for drawing, which, though discouraged at first by his father, was fostered by his schoolmaster; was patronised by Britton the antiquary, and employed by him to assist him in collecting materials for his "Beauties of England and Wales," but it was not till his visit to Rouen in 1818 that he was first fascinated with the subject that henceforth occupied him; from this time excursions were continually made to the Continent, and every corner of France, Germany, the Netherlands, and Italy was ransacked for its fragments of carved stone; the old architecture that then fascinated him henceforth became a conspicuous feature in all his after-works (1783-1852).

PROUT, WILLIAM, British scientist; the first to prepare urea and to determine its empirical formula; he published an hypothesis that all elements are composed of hydrogen and that their atomic weights are whole numbers; the theory was rejected at the time, but it was a curiously accurate forecast of the modern ideas of the atom, and his statement about the atomic weights is verified by the work of Aston on isotopes (1785-1850).

PROVENÇAL LANGUAGE, one of the Romance dialects of France, spoken in the South of France, and different from that spoken in the N. as in closer connection with the original Latin than that of the N. which was modified by Teutonic influence.

PROVENÇAL, a maritime province in the South of France, originally called Provincia by the Romans, which included the departments of Bouches-du-Rhône, Hautes-Alpes, Var, and part of Vaucluse.

PROVERBS, BOOK OF, a book of the Hebrew Scriptures, full of the teachings of wisdom bearing on the conduct of life, and though ascribed to Solomon, obviously not all of his composition, or even collection, and probably ascribed to him because of his fondness for wisdom in that form, and from his having procured the first collection. The principles inculcated are purely ethical, resting, however, on a religious basis, and concern the individual not as a member of any particular community, but as a member of the human race; the lessons of life and death are the same as in the covenant with Moses, and the condition in both cases is the observance or non-observance of God's commandments. There is no change in the principle, but in the expansion of it, and that amounts to the foundation of a kingdom of God which shall include all nations. In them the bonds of Jewish exclusiveness are burst and a catholic religion virtually established.

PROVIDENCE, a seaport and semi-capital of Rhode Island, U.S., on a river of the name, 44 m. SW. of Boston; it is a centre of a large manufacturing district, and has a large trade in woollens, jewellery, and hardware; has a number of public buildings, and institutions, churches, schools, libraries, and hospitals, as well as beautiful villas and gardens.

PRUDENTIUS, MARCUS AURELIUS CLEMENS, Christian poet of the 4th century, born in Spain; after spending the greater part of his life in secular affairs, gave himself up to religious meditation, and wrote hymns, lyrics, and polemics in verse.

PRUSSIA, the leading State of Germany, of which it occupies about two-thirds of the total territory, and contributes three-fifths of the population; it stretches from Holland and Belgium in the W. to Poland in the E., has Jutland and the sea on the N., and Lorraine, Bavaria, Hesse-Darmstadt, Saxony, Czechoslovakia, and Austria on the S.; the SW. portion is hilly and the soil often poor, but containing valuable mineral deposits; the N. and E. belong to the great European plain, devoted to agriculture and grazing; Hesse-Cassel is extremely fertile, and Nassau produces excellent wine; in the E. and in Hanover are extensive forests; Silesia, Westphalia, and Rhenish Prussia contain important coal-fields, and are consequently important industrial provinces; half the zinc of the world is mined in Prussia; lead, iron, copper, antimony, &c., are also wrought; the Harz Mountains are noted for their mines of salt, amber, and precious stones are found on the Baltic shores; textiles, metal wares, and beer are the main industries; Berlin and K^{ön}igsberg are the two chief manufacturing centres on the Continent; the great navigable rivers, Niemen, Vistula, Oder, Elbe, Weser, Rhine, and their tributaries and canals, excellent railways, and her central European position all favour Prussia's commerce, while her coastline, harbours, and mercantile fleet put her in communication with the markets of the world; the prevailing religion is Protestant; education is compulsory and good; there are several universities, and many libraries and educational institutions; the king of Prussia was emperor of Germany. The basis of the Prussian people was laid by German colonists placed amid the pagan Slavs whom they had conquered by the Teutonic knights of the 13th century; in 1611 their descendants chose a Hohenzollern prince; a century later the Hohenzollerns of Brandenburg succeeded; despite the Thirty Years' War Prussia became a European State, and was recognised as a kingdom in 1709; Frederick the Great (1740-1786) enlarged its bounds and developed its resources; the successive partitions of Poland added to her territory; humiliated by the peace of Tilsit, 1807, and ruined by the French occupation, she recovered after Waterloo; William I. and Bismarck still further increased her territory and prestige; by the Austrian War of 1866 and the French War of 1870-1871 her position as premier State in the Confederation was assured. The revolution of 1918 brought to an end both the kingdom of Prussia and the German Empire.

PRUSSIC ACID, or hydrocyanic acid, an excessively poisonous, volatile, inflammable liquid, found in leaves of certain plants and in the stones of plums, peaches, &c.

PRYDE, JAMES, Scottish artist. He studied in Paris, and first came to the fore as a poster designer; in the 'nineties he produced with his sister Mabel (Mrs. W. Nicholson) a series of posters by "Beggar-staff Brothers." Apart from posters his output was small but good (1886-).

PRYNN, WILLIAM, a Puritan censor morum, born in Swanswick, near Bath, bred to the bar; wrote a book or pamphlet called "Histrio-Mastix, or the Player's Scourge," against the stage, for which and a reflection in it against the virtue of the queen he was brought before the Star Chamber in 1634, sentenced to the pillory, and had his ears cropped off; and for an offence against Laud, whether by order of the Star Chamber or not is uncertain, was in 1637 sentenced anew, and "lost his ears a second and final time, having had them 'sewed on again' before"; after this the zeal of Prynne appears to have waned, for he was as a recalcitrant imprisoned by Cromwell after whose death he espoused the Royalist cause, and was appointed Keeper of the Records of the Tower (1600-1669).

PRYTANUM, name given to the public hall in Greek cities, and the headquarters of the executive.

PSALMANAZAR, GEORGE, an impostor, born in the South of France, who, being brought to London, imposed on Compton, bishop of London, by fabricating a history of Formosa, of which he professed to be a native, but was convicted of the error of his ways by Law's "Serious Call," and led afterwards what seemed a sober life, and one to commend the regard of Johnson (1679-1763).

PSALMS, THE BOOK OF, the name given in the Septuagint to a collection of sacred songs in the Hebrew Bible, which are all of a lyrical character and appear to have been at first collected for liturgical purposes. Their range is co-extensive with nearly all divine truth, and there are tones in them in accord with the experience and feelings of devout men in all ages. "The Psalter alone," says Ruskin, "which practically was the service-book of the Church for many ages, contains, merely in the first half of it, the sum of personal and social wisdom, . . . while the 48th, 72nd, and 75th have in them the law and the prophecy of all righteous government, and every real triumph of natural science is anticipated in the 104th. The collection bears the name of David, but it is clear the great body of them are of later date as well as of divers authorship, although it is often difficult to determine by whom some of them were written, and when. The determination of this, however, is of the less consequence, as the question is more a speculative one than a spiritual one, and whatever may be the result of inquiry in this matter the spiritual value of the Psalms, which is their real value, is nowise affected thereby. They express the real experiences of living men, who lay under an inner necessity to utter such a song, relieving themselves by the effort and ministering a means of relief to others in a like situation of soul.

PSYCHE (i.e. the soul), in the later Greek mythology the youngest of three daughters of a king, and of such beauty as to eclipse the attractions and awake the jealousy of Venus, the goddess of beauty, who in consequence sent Cupid, her son, to inspire her with love for a hideous monster, and so compass her ruin. Cupid, fascinated with her himself, spirited her away to a palace furnished with every delight, but instead of delivering her over to the monster, visited her himself at night as her husband, and left her before daybreak in the morning, because she must on no account know who he was. Here her sisters came to see her, and in their jealousy persuaded her to assure herself that it was not a monster that she slept with, so that she lit a lamp the next night to discover, when a drop of oil from it fell on his shoulder as he lay asleep beside her, upon which he at a bound started up and vanished out of sight. She thereupon gave way to a long wail of lamentation and set off a wandering over the wide world in search of her lost love, till she came to the palace of Venus, her arch-enemy, who seized on her person and made her her slave, subjecting her to a series of services, all of which she accomplished to the letter, so that Venus was obliged to relent and consent that, in the presence of all the gods of Olympus, Cupid and she should be united in immortal wedlock. "It is the story of the trials of the soul to achieve immortality.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH, SOCIETY FOR, a society founded in 1882 to inquire into the phenomena of spiritualism and kindred subjects of a recondite kind, the subject of telepathy having engaged a good deal of attention for a number of years.

PSYCHO-ANALYSIS, a method of treating mental and nervous cases, by investigating the past history of the patient and bringing to light "complexes" and "repressions" which have been affecting the mind subconsciously; the method was introduced by Freud, an Austrian psychologist, and has been used in cases where persons had an apparently irrational fear, e.g. of dark, closed spaces, &c.; in many cases this fear is found to be due to some long forgotten incident, and the explanation serves as a cure.

PTERODACTYL, extinct flying reptiles, remains of which have been found in Jurassic and Cretaceous strata; they had many birdlike characteristics, but are not the ancestors of birds.

PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM, the highly complex system of astronomy ascribed to Claudius Ptolemy, which assumed that the earth was the centre of a sphere which carried the heavenly bodies along in its daily revolution, accounted for the revolutions of the sun and moon by supposing they moved in eccentric circles round the earth, and regarded the planets as moving in epicycles round a point which itself revolved in an eccentric circle round the earth like the sun and moon.

PTOLEMAIS, the name of certain cities of antiquity, the most celebrated being Acre, in Syria (q.v.).

PTOLEMY, the name of the Macedonian kings of Egypt, of which there were 14 in succession, of whom Ptolemy I., Soter, was a favourite general of Alexander the Great, and the ruler of Egypt from 323 to 285 B.C.; Ptolemy II., Philadelphus, who ruled from 285 to 247, a patron of letters and an able administrator; Ptolemy III., Euergetes, who ruled from 247 to 222; Ptolemy IV., Philopator, who ruled from 222 to 205; Ptolemy V., Epiphanes, who ruled from 205 to 181; Ptolemy VI., Philometor, who ruled from 181 to 146; Ptolemy VII., Euergetes II., who ruled from 146 to 117; Ptolemy VIII., Soter, who ruled from 117 to 107, was driven from Alexandria, returning to it in 88, and reigning till 81; Ptolemy IX., Alexander I., who ruled from 107 to 88; Ptolemy X., Alexander II., who ruled from 81 to 80; Ptolemy XI., Auletes, who ruled from 80 to 51; Ptolemy XII., who ruled from 51 to 47; Ptolemy XIII., the Infant King, who ruled from 47 to 43; Ptolemy XIV., Cesarion, the son of Julius Caesar and Cleopatra, who ruled from 43 to 30.

PTOLEMY (CLAUDIUS PTOLEMAEUS), ancient astronomer and geographer, born in Egypt; lived in Alexandria in the 2nd century; was the author of the system of astronomy called after him; left behind him two writings bearing one on astronomy and one on geography, along with other works of importance.

PUBLICANS, or PUBLICANI, a name given by the Romans to persons who farmed the public revenues; especially a class of the Jewish people, often mentioned in the New Testament, and specially odious to the rest of the community as the farmers of the taxes imposed upon them, mostly at the instance of their foreign oppressors the Romans, and in the collection of which they had recourse to the most unjust exactions. They were in their regard not merely the tools of a foreign oppression, but traitors to their country and apostates from the faith of their fathers, and were to be classed with heathens, sinners, and harlots.

PUCINI, GIACOMO, Italian composer. Working at Milan Conservatoire, his first opera, "Le Villi," was produced at the Opera House there in 1854. "La Bohème," "La Tosca," and "Madame Butterfly" are his masterpieces (1858-).

PUCINOTTI, FRANCESCO, eminent Italian pathologist, born in Urbino, and author of the "Storia della Medicina" (History of Medicine), the fruit of the labour of twenty years (1794-1872).

PUCELLE LA (i.e. the Maid), Joan of Arc, the maid par excellence.

PUCK, a tricky, mischievous fairy. Identified with Robin Goodfellow, and sometimes confounded with a house spirit, propitiated by kind words and the liberty of the cream-bowl.

PUEBLA, on an elevated plateau 7000 ft. above the sea, 68 m. due SE. of Mexico, is the chief city of the republic, and a beautiful town, with Doric cathedral, theological, medical, and other schools, a museum, and two libraries; cotton goods, iron, paper, and glass are manufactured; it is a commercial city, and carries on a brisk trade. Is the name also of a Colorado town on the Arkansas River; it is in a rich mineral district, and is engaged in the manufacture of steel and iron wares.

PUEBLOS, primitive tribes of North American Indians living in Mexico and Arizona, so called because they are gathered together in pueblos, or villages, in communal houses of stone and mud; the several clans are distinguished by their totems, and generally are remarkable for their peculiar decorative pottery and fabrics, which show some resemblance to early Atee designs; the Zuni and Hopi Indians belong to the group.

PUERTO DE SANTA MARIA, a seaport in Spain, on the Bay of Cadiz, 9 m. SW. of Xeres, and the chief place of export of Xeres port or sherry wines.

PUERTO PLATA, the chief port of the Dominican Republic, on the N. of Hayti; exports tobacco, sugar, coffee, &c.

PUERTO PRINCEPE, a town on the E. of Cuba; manufactures cigars, and exports sugar, hides, and molasses; originally on the shore, but removed inland.

PUFF-ADDER, a deadly venomous African viper which frequents sandy places; it derives its name from its habit of inflating the body when disturbed.

PUFFENDORF, SAMUEL, BARON VON, eminent German jurist, born in Chemnitz, Saxony; wrote several works on jurisprudence, one of which, under the ban of Austria, was burned there by the hangman, but his "De Jure Naturæ et Gentium" is the one on which his fame rests; was successively in the service of Charles XI. of Sweden and the Elector of Brandenburg (1632-1694).

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS WELBY, architect, born in London, of French parentage; made a special study of Gothic architecture; assisted in decorating the new Houses of Parliament, but becoming a Roman Catholic he gave himself to designing a good number of Roman Catholic churches, including cathedrals; he wrote several works on architecture, and was the chief promoter of the "Medieval Court" in the Crystal Palace; he was afflicted in the prime of life with insanity, and died at Ramsgate (1812-1852).

PULCI, LUIGI, Italian poet, born in Florence; the personal friend of Lorenzo de' Medici, and the author of a burlesque poem of which Roland is the hero, entitled in Tuscan "Il Morgante Maggiore" ("Morgante the Great"); he wrote also several humorous sonnets; two brothers of his had similar gifts (1432-1484).

PULQUE, a favourite beverage of the Mexicans and in Central America, made from the fermented juice of the agave.

PULTENEY, WILLIAM, Earl of Bath, English statesman; in 1705 entered Parliament, zealous in the Whig interest; was for years the friend and colleague of Walpole, but afterwards, from a slight, became his bitterest enemy and most formidable opponent; he contributed a good deal to Walpole's fall, but, unable to take his place, contented himself with a peerage, his popularity being gone (1684-1764).

PULTOWA, a town in Southern Russia, 90 m. by rail SW. of Kharkoff, on an affluent of the Dnieper; manufactures leather and tobacco; here Peter the Great won his victory over Charles XII. of Sweden in 1709.

PULU, a kind of silk obtained from the fibres of a fern-tree of Hawaii.

PUNCH, the name of the chief character in a well-known puppet show of Italian origin, and appropriated as the title of the leading English comic journal, which is accompanied with illustrations conceived in a humorous vein and conducted in satire, from a liberal Englishman's standpoint, of the follies and weaknesses of the leaders of public opinion and fashion in modern social life. It was started in 1841 under the editorship of Henry Mayhew and Mark Lemon, and the witty literary men of the time as well as the cleverest artists have contributed to its pages, among the former being Thackeray, Douglas Jerrold, and Tom Hood, and among the latter Doyle, Leech, Tenniel, Du Maurier, and Linley Sambourne.

PUNDIT, a Brahmin learned in Sanskrit and in the language, literature, and laws of the Hindus.

PUNIO FAITH, a plighted promise that one can put no trust in, such as the Romans alleged they systematically experienced at the hands of the Fenici or Carthaginians.

PUNIO WARS, the name given to the wars between Rome and Carthage for the empire of the world, of date, the first from 264 to 241, the second from 218 to 201, and the third from 149 to 146 B.C., due all to transgressions on the one side or the other of boundaries fixed by treaty, which it was impossible for either in their passion of empire to respect. It was a struggle which, though it ended in the overthrow of Carthage, proved at one time the most critical in the history of Rome.

PUNJAB ("five rivers") a province in the extreme NW. of India, watered by the Indus and its four tributaries, Jhelum, Chenab, Ravee, and Sutlej; its frontiers touch Afghanistan and Kashmir. Mountain ranges traverse the N. W. and N. E.; little rain falls; the plains are dry and hot in summer. There is little timber, cow-dung is common fuel; the soil is barren, but under irrigation there are fertile stretches: wheat, indigo, sugar, cotton, tobacco, opium, and tea are largely grown; cotton, silk, lace, iron, and leather are manufactured; indigo, grain, cotton, and manufactured products are exported in exchange for raw material, dyes, horses, and timber. The population is mixed, Sikhs, Jats, and Rajputs predominate; more than a half are Mohammedan, and more than a third Hindu. Lahore is the capital, but Delhi and Amritsar are larger towns. Several railways run through the province. The natives remained loyal throughout the Mutiny of 1857-1858, Sikhs and Pathans joining the British troops before Delhi.

PURANAS, a body of religious works which rank second to the Vedas, and form the basis of the popular belief of the Hindus. There are 18 principal Puranas and 18 secondary Puranas, of various dates, but believed to be of remote antiquity, though modern critical research proves that in their present form they are not of very ancient origin.

PURBECK, ISLE OF, the peninsula in South Dorsetshire lying between the river Frome, Poole Harbour, and the English Channel; formerly a royal deer-forest; has a precipitous coast, and inland consists of chalk downs; nearly 100 quarries are wrought of "Purbeck marble."

PURCELL, HENRY, eminent English musician, born in Westminster; was successively organist at Westminster Abbey and to the Chapel Royal; excelled in all forms of musical composition; was the author of anthems, cantatas, glees, &c., which attained great popularity; he set the songs of Shakespeare's "Tempest" to music (1658-1695).

PURCHAS, SAMUEL, collector of works of travel and continuator of the work of Hakluyt, in two curious works entitled "Purchase his Pilgrimage," and "Hakluyt's his Posthumous or Purchas his Pilgrimage"; was rector of St. Martin's, Ludgate, and chaplain to Archbishop Abbot (1576-1626).

PURGATORIO, region in Dante's "Commedia" intermediate between the Inferno, region of lost souls, and the Paradiso, region of saved souls, and full of all manner of obstructions which the penitent, who would pass from the one to the other, must struggle with in soul-wrestle till he overcome.

PURGATORY, in the creed of the Church of Rome a place in which the souls of the dead, saved from hell by the death of Christ, are chastened and purified from venial sins, a result which is, in great part, ascribed to the prayers of the faithful and the sacrifice of the Mass. The creed of the Church in this matter was first formulated by Gregory the Great, and was based by him, as it has been vindicated since, on passages of Scripture as well as the writings of the Fathers.

PURIM, THE FEAST OF, or LOTH, an annual festival of the Jews in commemoration of the preservation, as recorded in "Esther," of their race from the threatened wholesale massacre of it in Persia at the instance of Haman, and so called because it was by casting "lots" that the day was fixed for the execution of the purpose. It lasts two days, being observed on the 14th and 15th of the month Adar.

PURITAN CITY, name given to Boston, U.S., from its founders and inhabitants, who were originally of Puritan stock.

PURITANS, a name given to a body of clergymen of the Church of England who refused to assent to the Act of Uniformity passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, because it required them to conform to Popish doctrine and ritual; and afterwards applied to the whole body of Nonconformists in England in the 16th and 17th centuries, who insisted on rigid adherence to the simplicity prescribed in these matters by the sacred Scriptures. In the days of Cromwell they were, "with musket on shoulder," the uncompromising foes of all forms, particularly in the worship of God, that affected to be alive after the soul had gone out of them.

PURSUIVANT, one of the junior officers in the Herald's College—four in England, named respectively Rouge Croix, Blue Mantle, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis, and three in Scotland, named respectively Butte, Carrick, and Unicorn.

PUSEY, EDWARD BOUVERIE, English theologian, born in Berkshire, of Flemish descent; studied at Christ Church, Oxford, and became a Fellow of Oriel, where he was brought into relationship with Newman, Keble, and Whately; spent some time in Germany studying Rationalism, and, after his return, was in 1828 appointed Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford; in 1833 he joined the Tractarian Movement, to which he contributed by his learning, and which, from his standing in the University, as well as from the part he played in it, was at length called by his name; he was not so conspicuous as other members of the movement, but he gained some notoriety by a sermon he preached on the Eucharist, which led to his suspension for three years, and, notwithstanding his life of seclusion, he took an active part in all questions affecting the interests he held to be at stake; he was the author of several learned works, among them the "Minor Prophets, a Commentary," and "Daniel the Prophet" (1800-1882).

PUSHKIN, ALEXANDER SERGIEVITCH, a distinguished Russian poet and dramatist, born in Moscow; his chief works are "Ruslan and Lyudmila" (a heroic poem), "Eugene Onegin" (a romance), and "Boris Godunov" (a drama); was mortally wounded in a duel (1798-1837).

PUTEAUX, a suburb of Paris, on the left bank of the Seine, a favourite residence of the Parisians, who have villas here.

PUTNEY, a London suburb on the Surrey side, 6 m. from Waterloo, has a bridge across the Thames 300 yards long; the parish church tower dates from the 15th century. The river here affords favourite rowing water, the starting-place of the inter-universities boat-race; Putney Heath was a favourite duelling resort; Gibbon was a native; Pitt and Leigh Hunt died here.

PUY, LE, a picturesque town, 70 m. SW. of Lyons, a bishop's seat, with a 10th-century cathedral; is the centre of a great lace manufacture.

PUY-DE-DÔME, a department in Central France, in the upper valley of the Allier, on the slopes of the Auvergne Mountains. The soil is poor, but agriculture and cattle-breeding are the chief industries; in the mountains coal and lead are found, and there are many mineral springs; there are paper and oil manufactures. The principal town is Clermont-Ferrand, where Peter the Hermit preached the first crusade.

PYGMALION, king of Cyprus, is said to have fallen in love with an ivory statue of a maiden he had himself made, and to have prayed Aphrodite to breathe life into it. The request being granted, he married the maiden and became by her the father of Paphos.

PYGMIES, a fabulous people, their height 1½ inches, mentioned by Homer as dwelling on the shores of the ocean and attacked by cranes in spring time, the theme of numerous stories. It is also the name of a dwarf tribe in Central Africa discovered by Stanley and described also by other explorers.

PYLADES. See ORESTES.

PYLE, HOWARD, American artist and author, born in Wilmington, Delaware; a contributor to the Century and other magazines, author and illustrator of "The Merry Adventures of Robin Hood," "Jack Ballister's Fortunes," and "Otto of the Silver Hand" (1883-1911).

PYM, JOHN, Puritan statesman, born in Somersetshire, educated at Oxford; bred to law, entered Parliament in 1621, opposed the arbitrary measures of the king, took a prominent part in the impeachment of Buckingham; at the opening of the Long Parliament procured the impeachment of the Earl of Strafford, and conducted the proceedings against him; he was one of the five members illegally arrested by Charles I., and was brought back again in triumph to Westminster; was appointed Lieutenant of the Ordnance, and a month after died (1584-1643).

PYRAMID OF CHOLULA, an imposing structure believed to have been erected by Montezuma, emperor of Mexico; stands to the west of Puebla, with a base twice the size of that of Cheops' Pyramid at Ghizeh; was used as a mausoleum.

PYRAMIDS, ancient structures of stone or sometimes brick, resting generally on square bases and tapering upwards with triangular sides, found in different parts of the world, but chiefly in Egypt, where they exist to the number of 70 or 80, and of which the most celebrated are those of Ghizeh, 10 m. W. of Cairo, three in number, viz., the Great Pyramid of Cheops, 449 ft. high, and the sides at base 746 ft. long, that named Chefnen, nearly the same size, and that of Mykerinos, not half the height of the other two, but excelling them in beauty of execution. The original object of these structures has been matter of debate, but there seems to be now no doubt that they are sepulchral monuments of kings of Egypt from the first to the twelfth dynasty. From certain marks in the King's Chamber of the Great Pyramid a school of Bible students claims to be able to read the history of the world, alleging that the Great War, the capture of Jerusalem, and the period of tribulation are all marked thereon.

PYRAMUS AND THISBE, two lovers who lived in adjoining houses in Babylon, and who used to converse with each other through a hole in the wall, because their parents would not allow them open intimacy, but who arranged to meet one evening at the tomb of Nisus. The maiden appearing at the spot and being confronted by a lioness who had just killed an ox, took to flight and left her garment behind her, which the lioness had soiled with blood. Pyramus, arriving after this, saw only the bloody garment on the spot and immediately killed himself, concluding she had been murdered, while she on return finding him lying in his blood, threw herself upon his dead body and was found a corpse at his side in the morning.

PYRENEES, a broad chain of lofty mountains running from the Bay of Biscay, 276 m. eastwards, to the Mediterranean, form the boundary between France and Spain. They are highest in the centre, Mount Malsdetta reaching 11,163 ft. The snow-line is about 8000 or 9000 ft., and there are glaciers on the French side. Valleys run up either side, ending in precipitous "pot-holes," with great regularity. The passes are very dangerous from wind and snow storms. The streams to the N. feed the Adour and Garonne; those to the S., the Ebro and Douro. Vegetation in the W. is European, in the E. sub-tropical. Minerals are few, though both iron and coal are worked. The basis of the system is granite with limestone strata superimposed.

PYRIDINE, an organic liquid with an unpleasant smell, found in coal tar.

PYROGRAPHY, the decoration of wood by means of burning or charring, the most popular form being known as "poker work"; it can be performed also by the use of the blowpipe; an art known to the PYRRHA, in Greek mythology the wife of Deucalion; (q.v.).

PYRRHIC DANCE, the chief war dance of the Greeks of quick, light movement, to the music of flutes; was of Cretan or Spartan origin. It was subsequently danced for display by the Athenian youths and by women to entertain company, and in the Roman empire was a favourite item in the public games.

PYRRHIC VICTORY, a ruinous victory. See PYRRHUS.

PYRRHO, the father of the Greek scepticism, born in Elis, a contemporary of Aristotle; his doctrine was that, as we cannot know things as they are, only as they seem to be, we must be content to suspend our judgment on such matters and maintain a perfect imperturbability of soul if we would live to any good.

PYRRHONISM, philosophic scepticism. See PYRRHO.

PYRRHUS, king of Epirus, and kinsman of Alexander the Great; essayed to emulate the Macedonian by conquering the western world, and in 280 B.C. invaded Italy with a huge army, directed to assist the Italian Greeks against Rome; in the decisive battles of that year and the next, he won "Pyrrhic victories" over the Romans, losing so many men that he could not pursue his advantage; 278 to 276 he spent helping the Greek colonies in Sicily against Carthage; his success was not uniform, and a Carthaginian fleet inflicted a serious defeat on his fleet returning to Italy; in 274 he was thoroughly vanquished by the Romans, and retired to Epirus; subsequent wars against Sparta and Arros were marked by disaster; in the latter he was killed by a tile thrown by a woman (318-272 B.C.).

PYRRHUS, called also Neoptolemus, son of Achilles; was one of the heroes concealed in the wooden horse by means of which Troy was entered, slew Priam by the altar of Zeus, and sacrificed Polyxena to the manes of his father. Andromache, the widow of Hector, fell to him on the division of the captives after the fall of Troy, and became his wife.

PYTCHLEY, a village in Northamptonshire, 3 m. SW. of Kettering; famous as a hunting centre since the 18th century, though the kennels have been removed to Brix. orth.

PYTHAGORAS, a celebrated Greek philosopher and founder of a school named after him Pythagoreans, born in Samos; he seems to have flourished between 540 and 500 B.C.; after travels in many lands settled at Crotona in Magna Græcia, where he founded a fraternity, the members of which bound themselves in closest ties of friendship to purity of life and to active co-operation in disseminating and encouraging a kindred spirit in the community around them, the final aim of it being the establishment of a model social organization. He left no writings behind him, and we know of his philosophy chiefly from that of his disciples.

PYTHAGOREANS, the school of philosophy founded by Pythagoras, "the fundamental thought of which," according to Schwegler, "was that of proportion and harmony, and this idea is to be seen as well the principle of practical life, as the supreme law of the universe." It was a kind of "arithmetical mysticism, and the leading thought was that law, order, and agreement obtain in the affairs of Nature, and that these relations are capable of being expressed in number and in measure." The whole tendency of the Pythagoreans, in a practical aspect, was ascetic, and aimed only at a rigid castigation of the moral principle in order thereby to ensure the emancipation of the soul from its mortal prison-house and its transmigration into a nobler form. It is with the doctrine of the transmigration of souls that the Pythagorean philosophy is specially associated.

PYTHEAS, a celebrated Greek navigator of Massilia, in Gaul, probably lived in the time of Alexander the Great; in his first voyage visited Britain and Thule, and in his second coasted along the western shore of Europe from Cadiz to the Elbe.

PYTHIAN GAMES, celebrated from very early times till the 4th century A.D. every four years, near Delphi, in honour of Apollo, who was said to have instituted them to commemorate his victory over the Python; originally were contests in singing only, but after the middle of the 6th century B.C. they included instrumental music, contests in poetry and art, athletic exercises, and horse-racing.

PYTHON, in the Greek mythology a serpent or dragon produced from the mud left on the earth after the deluge of Deucalion, a brood of sheer chaos and the dark, who lived in a cave of Parnassus, and was slain by Apollo, who founded the Pythian Games in commemoration of his victory, and was in consequence called Pythius.

PYTHON, a non-venomous, constricting serpent of the Boa (q.v.) family; found in tropical countries, mostly in Indo-China, Malay, and Africa, specimens in the last-named continent not attaining the size and length of Indian species, which often exceed 20 ft.; their food is small mammals and birds, but the bigger serpents will attack and consume larger animals.

PYTHONESS, the priestess of Apollo at Delphi (q.v.), so called from the Python (q.v.), the dragon slain by the god.

PYX, the name of a cup-shaped, gold-lined vessel, with lid, used in the Roman Catholic churches for containing the eucharistic elements after their consecration either for adoration in the churches or for conveying to sick-rooms. Pyx means "box." Hence Trial of the Pyx is the annual test of the British coinage, for which purpose one coin in every 15 lbs. of gold and one in every 60 lbs. of silver coined are set aside in a pyx or box.

Q-BOATS

Q-BOATS, special ships used by the British navy during the Great War to cope with submarines. Disguised as cargo vessels with crews in appropriate disguise, they carried concealed guns which came into action after a submarine rose to the surface to capture them. Rear-Admiral Gordon Campbell, V.O., was one of the chief pioneers of the system.

QUITO, the capital of Ecuador, situated at an elevation of nearly 9000 ft. above the sea-level, and cut up with ravines; stands in a region of perpetual spring and amid picturesque surroundings, the air clear and the sky a dark deep blue. The chief buildings are of stone, but all the ordinary dwellings are of sun-dried brick and without chimneys. It is in the heart of a volcanic region, and is subject to frequent earthquakes, in one of which, in 1797, 40,000 of the inhabitants perished. The population consists chiefly of Indians.

QUITO, CORDILLERA OF, a chain of mountains, the chief of them volcanic, in Ecuador, containing the loftiest peaks of the Andes, and including among them Antisana, Cotopaxi, and Chimborazo.

QUIT-RENT, a rent the payment of which frees the tenant of a holding from other services such as were obligatory under feudal tenure.

QUOITS, a game of considerable antiquity, having originated in the Roman sport of discus-throwing; in the modern game the quoit is an iron ring, several pounds in weight, and of a flat shape, which is thrown to a mark.

QUORRA, the name given to the middle and lower course of the Niger.

QUORUM, the number of the members of a governing body required by law to give legality to any transaction in the name of it.

RAAB

RAAB, a town in Hungary, 67 m. NW. of Buda-Pesth, manufactures machinery and cutlery.

RAASAY, one of the Inner Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, lies between Skye and Ross-shire; bare on the W., picturesque on the E.; has interesting ruins of Brochel Castle.

RABANT DE ST. ÉTIENNE, a moderate French Revolutionary; member of the Constituent Assembly; one of the Girondists; opposed the extreme party, and when proscribed, concealed himself between two walls he had built in his brother's house; was discovered, and doomed to the guillotine, as were also those who protected him (1743-1793).

RABAT, known also as New Salée, a declining port in Morocco, finely situated on elevated ground overlooking the mouth of the Bu-Kagrag River, 115 m. SE. of Fez; is surrounded by walls, and has a commanding citadel, a noted tower, interesting ruins, &c.; manufactures carpets, mats, and pottery, and exports olive-oil, grain, and wool.

RABBI (lit. my master), an appellation of honour applied to a teacher of the Law among the Jews, in frequent use among them in the days of Christ, who was frequently saluted by this title.

RABBISM, the name applied in modern times to the principles and methods of the Jewish Rabbis, particularly in the interpretation of the Jewish Scriptures.

RABELAIS, FRANÇOIS, great French humorist, born in Chinon, the son of a poor apothecary; was sent to a convent at nine; became a Franciscan monk; read and studied a great deal, but, sick of convent life, ran away at forty years of age; went to Montpellier and studied medicine, and for a time practiced it, particularly at Lyons; here he commenced the series of writings that have immortalized his name, his "Gargantua" and "Pantagruel," which he finished as cure of Meudon, forming a succession of satires in a vein of riotous mirth on monks, priests, pedants, and all the incarnate solacisms of the time, yet with all their licentiousness revealing a heart in love with mankind, and a passionate desire for the establishment of truth and justice among men (1483-1553).

RACES OF MANKIND. These have been divided into the Caucasian or Indo-European, the Mongolian or Yellow, the Negro or Black, and the Australoids.

RACHEL, ELISA, a great French tragedienne, born in Switzerland, of Jewish parents; made her début in Paris in 1838, and soon became famous as the interpreter of the principal characters in the masterpieces of Racine and Corneille, her crowning triumph being the representation, in 1843, of Phèdre in the tragedy of Racine; she made a great impression wherever she appeared and realized a large fortune (1821-1858).

RACHMANINOFF, SERGEI VASSILIEVITCH, Russian pianist and composer. Born in Novgorod, he was educated at Moscow and St. Petersburg, and later appeared in the principal cities of Europe and America both as pianist and conductor; his most popular composition is his "Prelude" (1874-).

RACINE, a flourishing city of Wisconsin, U.S.A., capital of Racine County, at the entrance of Root River into Lake Michigan, 62 m. N. of Chicago; has an Episcopal university; trades in lumber, flax, and the products of various factories.

RACINE, JEAN, great French tragic poet, born in La Ferté Milon, in the dep. of Aisne; was educated at Beauvais and the Port Royal; in 1663 settled in Paris, gained the favour of Louis XIV. and the friendship of Boileau, La Fontaine, and Molière, though he quarrelled with the latter, and finally lost favour with the king, which he never recovered, and which hastened his death; he raised the French language to the highest pitch of perfection in his tragedies, of which the chief are "L'Andromaque" (1667), "Britannicus" (1669), "Mithridate" (1673), "Iphigénie" (1674), "Phèdre" (1677),

RADIOACTIVITY

"Æther" (1688), and "Athalie" (1691), as well as an exquisite comedy entitled "Les Plaideurs" (1699); when Voltaire was asked to write a commentary on Racine, his answer was, "One had only to write at the foot of each page, beau, pathétique, harmonieux, admirable, sublime" (1639-1697).

RACK, an instrument of torture; consisted of an oblong wooden frame, fitted with cords and levers, by means of which the victim's limbs were racked to the point of dislocation; dates back to Egyptian, Greek, and Roman times, and was used against the early Christians; much resorted to by the Spanish Inquisition, and also at times by the Tudor monarchs of England, though subsequently prohibited by law in England.

RADCLIFFE, a prosperous town of Lancashire, on the Irwell, 7 m. NW. of Manchester; manufactures cotton, calico, and paper; has bleaching and dye works, and good coal-mines.

RADCLIFFE, MRS. ANN, nee WARD, English novelist, born in London; wrote a series of popular works which abound in weird tales and scenes of old castles and gloomy forests, of which the best known is the "Mysteries of Udolpho" (1764-1823).

RADCLIFFE, JOHN, physician, born in Wakefield, studied at Oxford; commenced practice in London; by his art and professional skill rose to eminence; attended King William and Queen Mary; summoned to attend Queen Anne but did not, pleading illness, and on the queen's death was obliged to disappear from London; left £40,000 to found a public library in the University of Oxford (1650-1714).

RADETZKY, JOHANN, COUNT VON, Austrian field-marshal, born in Bohemia; entered the Austrian army in 1784; distinguished himself in the war with Turkey in 1788-1789, and in all the wars of Austria with France; checked the Revolution in Lombardy in 1848; defeated and almost annihilated the Piedmontese army under Charles Albert in 1840, and compelled Venice to capitulate in the same year, after which he was appointed Governor of Lombardy (1766-1858).

RADFORD, ROBERT, British bass singer. Born in Nottingham, he studied at the Royal Academy of Music and made his opera debut in 1906; the same year he appeared in the Handel Festival, and later was heard throughout the country (1874-).

RADIATION, the transmission of heat across space without warming the intermediate medium; radiant heat obeys the same laws as light with respect to reflection and refraction, and only differs from light in its longer wave-length; the term radiation is often used to denote all those wave motions emitted by a hot body, i.e. visible rays, infra-red (or heat rays), and ultra-violet (q.v.).

RADICALS, a class of English politicians who, at the end of the 18th century and the beginning of the 19th, aimed at the political emancipation of the mass of the people by giving them a share in the election of parliamentary representatives. Their Radicalism went no farther than that, and on principle could not go farther. The name was derived from a speech of Charles James Fox in 1797, in which he advocated "radical reform."

RADIOACTIVITY. During researches following the discovery of X-rays by Röntgen in 1895, A. H. Becquerel, a French scientist, found that uranium salts gave off rays which affected a photographic plate and could be detected by a phosphorescent screen or an electroscope; further work showed that this property was shared by thorium, actinium, and two new elements named radium and polonium, discovered by M. and Mme. Curie; the radiations were found to be of three distinct types, alpha or positive particles, beta or negative particles (electrons), and gamma rays, which are X-rays of small wave-length; the investigations carried on by Rutherford, Soddy, and others from 1902 onwards, showed that the radioactive substances form a series, and that each element after expelling an alpha or beta particle becomes a new element; uranium changes in a number of steps to ionium and radium breaks up in successive stages to give polonium and finally lead; actinium and its products appear to be a branch of the uranium series, whilst thorium is entirely separate, although it leads to the same end-product, lead; the study of radioactivity led to the modern theory of the atom; variation of the pressure, temperature, &c., has been found to have no effect on radioactive substances.

RADIOLARIANS, primitive microscopic organisms whose remains form the ooze on the beds of the ocean. See PLANKTON.

RADIOLOGY, the application of X-rays in medicine and surgery.

RADIOMICROMETER, a delicate instrument for detecting and measuring radiation devised by C. V. Boys on the principle of the thermopile.

RADISSON, PIERRE ESPRIT, French-Canadian explorer, born in St. Malo, France; captured as a youth by Iroquois Indians and enrolled in their band; escaped, and in 1658 joined his brother-in-law, Groselliers, in an expedition beyond the Great Lakes, discovering the Upper Mississippi and being the first white men to penetrate the great North-West; was a pioneer in the fur trade, assisting to found the Hudson's Bay Company (c. 1636-1710).

RADIUM, a rare radioactive element, chemically resembling barium, which is found in minute quantities in uranium minerals; it is one of the products of uranium, being formed by the disintegration of ionium; radium breaks down, giving an alpha particle and a new gaseous element named niton or radon, resembling the inert gases, argon, &c., and being known as the emanation; the emanation, as a result of further disintegration, gives rise to the active deposit, consisting of a number of new elements of short life; the result of the disintegration of the active deposit is polonium, and finally lead; one gram of radium would lose half its mass in a period of 1600 years; radium has been used extensively for medical purposes, especially in the treatment of cancer; it was discovered by the Curies (q.v.), who, after laborious toil, extracted a minute quantity from two tons of pitchblende.

RADNORSHIRE, the least populous of the Welsh counties; lies on the English border between Montgomery (N.) and Brecknock (S.); has a wild and dreary surface, mountainous and woody. Radnor Forest covers an elevated, heathy tract in the E.; is watered by the Wye and the Teme. The soil does not favour agriculture, and stock-raising is the chief industry. Contains some excellent spas, that at Llandrinod the most popular. County town, New Radnor.

RADOWITZ, JOSEPH VON, Prussian statesman; entered the army as an artillery officer, rose to be chief of the artillery staff; by marriage became connected with the aristocracy; at length head of the Anti-Revolutionary party in the State, and the political adviser of William IV., in which capacity he endeavoured to effect a reform of the German Diet, and to give a political constitution to Germany (1797-1853).

RAE, JOHN, Arctic voyager, born in Orkney, studied medicine in Edinburgh; first visited the Arctic regions as a surgeon; was engaged in three expeditions to these regions, of which he published reports; discovered relics of Franklin in 1853 (1813-1893).

RAEBURN, SIR HENRY, portrait-painter, born in Stockbridge, Edinburgh; apprenticed to a goldsmith in the city, and gave early promise of his abilities as an artist; went to Italy as the result of an introduction to Reynolds, and after two years' absence settled in Edinburgh, and became famous as one of the greatest painters of the day; the portraits he painted included likenesses of all the distinguished Scotsmen of the period, at the head of them Sir Walter Scott; was knighted by George IV. a short time before his death (1756-1823).

RAFF, JOACHIM, musical composer of the Wagner School, born in Lachen, in Switzerland; began life as a schoolmaster; was attracted to music; studied at Weimar; lived near Liszt, and became Director of the Conservatorium at Frankfurt-on-Main; his works include symphonies, overtures, with pieces for the violin and the piano (1822-1882).

RAFFLES, SIR THOMAS STAMFORD, English administrator, born in Jamaica; entered the East India Company's service, and rose in it; became Governor of Java, and wrote a history of it; held afterwards an important post in Sumatra, and formed a settlement at Singapore; returned to England with a rich collection of natural objects and documents, but lost most of them by the ship taking fire (1781-1826).

RAFIN, KARL CHRISTIAN, Danish archaeologist born in Fünen; devoted his life to the study of northern antiquities; edited numerous Norse MSS.; executed translations of Norse literature; wrote original treatises in the same interest, and by his researches established the fact of the discovery of America by the Norsemen in the 10th century (1796-1864).

RAGGED SCHOOLS, a name given to the charity schools which provided education and, in most cases, food, clothing, and lodging for destitute children; they received no Government support. The movement had its beginning in the magnanimous efforts of John Pounds (d. 1839), a shoemaker of Portsmouth; but the zeal and eloquence of Dr. Guthrie (q.v.) of Edinburgh greatly furthered the development and spread of these schools throughout the kingdom.

RAGLAN, FITZROY SOMERSET, LORD, youngest son of the Duke of Beaufort; entered the army at sixteen; served with distinction all through the Peninsular War; became aide-de-camp to the Duke of Wellington and his military secretary; lost his right arm at Waterloo; did diplomatic service at Paris in 1815, and held afterwards a succession of important military posts; was appointed commander-in-chief of the British forces in the Crimea, and was present at all the engagements, till attacked by cholera, aggravated by a repulse and unjust reflections on his conduct of the war, his health was affected and he died in camp (1789-1842).

RAGMAN, ROLL, the name given to a record of the acts of fealty and homage done by the Scottish nobility and gentry in 1296 to Edward I. of England, and of value for the list it supplies of the nobles, gentry, burgesses, and clergy of the country at that period. The original written rolls of parchment have perished, but an abridged form is extant, and preserved in the Tower of London. The name is derived from that of Ragimunde, a papal legate who had been earlier commissioned to make a return of the Scottish clergy and their emoluments.

RAGNARÖK, in the Norse mythology the twilight of the gods, when it was predicted "the Divine powers and the chaotic brute ones, after long contest and partial victory by the former, should meet at last in universal, world-embracing wrestle and duel, strength against strength, mutually extinctive"; in this catastrophe Vidar and another are to be spared to found a new heaven and a new earth, the sovereign of which shall be Justice.

RAGUSA, a decayed city on the Dalmatian coast, fronting the Adriatic; has interesting remains of its ancient greatness, and still contains several fine monastic and other buildings.

RAHEL, wife of Varnhagen von Ense, born in Berlin, of Jewish parentage; was a woman of "rare gifts, worth, and true genius, and equal to the highest thoughts of her century"; and lived in intimate relation with all the intellectual lights of Germany at the time; worshipped at the shrine of Goethe, and was the foster-mother of German genius generally in her day; she did nothing of a literary kind herself; all that remains of her gifts in that line are her Letters, published by her husband on her death, which letters, however, are intensively subjective, and reveal the state rather of her feelings than the thoughts of her mind (1771-1838).

RAIKES, ROBERT, the founder of Sunday Schools, born in Gloucester; by profession a printer; lived to see his pet institution established far and wide over England; left a fortune for benevolent objects (1735-1811).

RAILWAY KING, name given by Sydney Smith to George Hudson (q.v.), the great railway speculator, who is said to have one day in the course of his speculations in scrip realised as much as £100,000.

RAILWAYS. The railway companies of Great Britain are now amalgamated into four groups. (1) The London, Midland and Scottish (L.M.S. & Co.), consisting of the London and North-Western, the Midland, the Lancashire and Yorkshire, the North Staffordshire, the Furness, the Glasgow and South-Western, the Caledonian, the Highland, and the Maryport and Carlisle, and other smaller companies. (2) The London and North Eastern (L.N.E.R.), consisting of the North Eastern, the Great Northern, the Great Central, the Great Eastern, the Hull and Barnsley, the North British, and other companies of the Eastern coast. (3) The Great Western (G.W.R.), consisting of the Great Western, the Cambrian, the Taff Vale, and other lines in South Wales, and a few other local companies. (4) The Southern (S.R.), which is a combination of the London and South Western, the London, Brighton and South Coast, the South Eastern and Chatham, and the Isle of Wight companies.

RAJAH, a title which originally belonged to princes of the Hindu race who exercised sovereign rights over some tract of territory; now applied loosely to native princes or nobles with or without territorial lordship.

RAJMAHAL, an interesting old Indian town, crowns an elevated site on the Ganges, 170 m. N.W. of Calcutta; has ruins of several palaces.

RAJON, PAUL ADOLPHE, French etcher, born in Dijon; made his mark in 1866 with his "Rembrandt at Work"; carried off medals at the Salon; visited England in 1872, and executed notable etchings of portraits of J. S. Mill, Darwin, Tennyson, &c. (1844-1888).

RAJPUT, a name given to a Hindu of royal descent or of the high military caste; that is, of the Kshatriyas, supposed to be sprung direct from Brahma. See CASTE.

RAJPUTANA, an extensive tract of country in the N.W. of India, S. of the Punjab, embracing some twenty native States and the British district Ajmere-Merwara. The soil is arid, the climate is the S., while the Thar or Great Indian Desert occupies the N. and W. Jodhpur is the largest of the native territories, and the Rajputa, a proud and warlike people, are the dominant race in many of the States, known for their loyalty to the British throne.

RAKOZY MARCH, the national anthem of the Hungarians, composed about the end of the 17th century by an unknown composer, and said to have been the favourite march of Francis Rakoczy II. of Transylvania.

RAKSHASAS, in the Hindu mythology a species of evil spirits, akin to ogres.

RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, courtier, soldier, and man of letters, born in Hayes Barton, in E. Devon, of ancient family; entered as student at Oxford, but at 17 joined a small volunteer force in aid of the Protestants in France; in 1580 distinguished himself in suppressing a rebellion in Ireland; was in 1582 introduced at Court, fascinated the heart of the Queen by his handsome presence and his gallant bearing, and received favours at her hand; joined his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, in an expedition to North America, founded a colony, which he called Virginia in honour of the Queen, and brought home with him the potato and the tobacco plants, till then unknown in this country; rendered distinguished services in the destruction of the Armada; visited and explored Guiana, and brought back tidings of its wealth in gold and precious things; fell into disfavour with the Queen, but regained her esteem; under King James he became suspected of disloyalty, and was committed to the Tower, where he remained 12 years, and wrote his "History of the World"; on his release, but without a pardon, he set out to the Orinoco in quest of gold-mines there, but returned unsuccessful and was sentenced to die; he met his fate with calm courage, and was beheaded in the Old Palace Yard; of the executioner's axe he smilingly remarked, "A sharp medicine, but an infallible cure" (1552-1618).

RAISTON, WILLIAM SHEDDEN, a noted Russian scholar and translator, born in London; studied at Cambridge, and in 1862 was called to the bar, but never practised; assistant in the British Museum library till 1875; visited Russia; his works embrace "Songs of the Russian People," "Russian Folk-Tales," &c. (1828-1889).

RAMA, in the Hindu mythology an avatar of Vishnu, being the seventh, in the character of a hero, a destroyer of monsters and a bringer of joy, as the name signifies, the narrative of whose exploits is given in the "Rāmāyana" (q.v.).

RAMADAN, the ninth month of the Mohammedan year, a kind of Lent, held sacred as a month of fasting by all Moslems, being the month in the life of Mohammed when, as he spent it alone in meditation and prayer, his eyes were opened to see, through the shows of things, into the one eternal Reality, the greatness and absolute sovereignty of Allah, and when the Koran was communicated to him.

RAMĀYANA, one of the two great epic poems, and the best, of the Hindus (the other being the Mahābhārata, q.v.), celebrating the life and exploits of Rāma, "a work of art in which an elevated religious and moral spirit is allied with much poetic fiction. . . written in accents of an ardent charity, of a compassion, a tenderness, and a humility at once sweet and plaintive, which ever and anon suggest Christian influences"; its precepts inculcate the delights of home life and the joys of brotherly love and unselfishness.

RAMBLER, a periodical containing essays by Johnson in the Spectator vein, issued in 1760-1762, but written in the stiff and cumbrous style which has been rather unjustly identified with Johnson's manner of writing generally.

RAMBOUILLET, MARQUISE DE, a lady of wealth and a lover of literature and art, born in Rome, who settled in Paris, and conceiving the idea of forming a society of her own, gathered together into her salon a select circle of intellectual people, which, degenerating into pedantry, became an object of general ridicule and was dissolved at her death (1582-1665).

RAMEAU, JEAN PHILIPPE, French composer, born in Dijon; wrote on harmony, and, settling in Paris, composed operas, his first "Hippolyte et Aricie," and his best "Caster et Pollux" (1683-1764).

RAMESES, the name of several ancient kings of Egypt, of which the most famous are R. II. (1300-1250 B.C.), who erected a number of monuments in token of his greatness, and at whose court Moses was brought up; and R. III. (1180-1150 B.C.), the first king of the twentieth dynasty, under whose successors the power of Egypt fell into decay.

RAMILLIES, Belgian village in Brabant, 14 m. N. of Namur; scene of Marlborough's victory over the French under Villeroi in 1706.

RAM MOHUN ROY, a Brahman, founder of the Brahmo-Soma, born in Burdwan, Lower Bengal; by study of the theology of the West was led to embrace deism, and tried to persuade his countrymen to accept the same faith, by proofs which he advanced to show that it was the doctrine of their own sacred books, in particular the Upanishads; with this view he translated and published a number of texts from them in vindication of his contention, as well as expounded his own conviction in original treatises; in doing so he naturally became an object of attack, and was put on his defence, which he conducted in a succession of writings that remain models of controversial literature; died in Bristol (1772-1833).

RAMSAY, ALLAN, Scottish poet, born in Crawford, Lanarkshire; bred a wig-maker; took to book-selling, and published his own poems, "The Gentle Shepherd," a pastoral, among the number, a piece which describes and depicts manners very charmingly, and, with other of his writings, led to a revival of Scottish vernacular poetry (1686-1758).

RAMSAY, ALLAN, portrait-painter, son of preceding; studied three years in Italy, settled in London, and was named first painter to George III. (1718-1784).

RAMSAY, EDWARD BANNERMAN, dean of Edinburgh, born in Aberdeen, graduated at Cambridge; held several curacies; became incumbent of St. John's Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, in 1880, and dean of the diocese in 1840; declined a bishopric twice over; is widely known as the author of "Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character": was a most genial, lovable man, a great lover of his country, and much esteemed in his day by all the citizens of Edinburgh (1798-1872).

RAMSAY, SIR WILLIAM, British chemist, professor of Chemistry at Bristol and afterwards at University College, London; he discovered helium and, with Rayleigh, argon in the atmosphere, as well as the other inert gases neon, krypton, and xenon; he carried out many researches in organic and physical chemistry (1852-1916).

RAMSEYTON, a busy manufacturing town in Lancashire, on the Irwell, 4 m. N. of Bury, engaged in cotton-weaving, calico-printing, rope-making, &c.

RAMSDEN, JESSE, mathematical instrument-maker and inventor, born in Yorkshire; made notable improvements in the sextant and micrometer, and in the theodolite for the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain (1785-1800).

RAMSEY, a beautifully situated, healthy watering-place, 14 m. N.E. of Douglas, in the Isle of Man.

RAMSGATE, a popular watering-place in Thanet, Kent, fronting the Downs, 72 m. E. by S. of London; has a famous harbour of refuge; to the W. lies Pegwell Bay with Ebbesfleet.

RAMUS, PETER, or PIERRE DE LA RAMÉE, a French philosopher and humanist, son of poor parents; became a servant in the College of Navarre; devoted his leisure to study, and became a great scholar; attacked scholasticism in a work against Aristotle as the main pillar of the system, and was interdicted from teaching philosophy, but the judgment was reversed by Henry II., and he was made a royal professor; he turned Protestant in the end, and was massacred on the eve of St. Bartholomew (1515-1572).

RANALOW, FREDERICK BARING, British baritone singer. Born in Dublin; he studied at the Royal Academy of Music; he appeared in opera and at the chief musical festivals; he toured Australia with Melba; Captain Macnath in "The Beggar's Opera" was one of his most successful rôles (1875-).

RAVALONA III., queen of Madagascar; was crowned in 1883, but her kingdom and capital were taken from her by the French in 1893 (1861-1917).

RANCHING, a term of Spanish derivation applied to the business of rearing cattle, as carried on in the southern and western States of America, and in the Canadian North-West; vast herds of cattle in a half-wild condition are raised on the wide stretches of prairie land, and are tended by "cowboys," whose free, adventurous life attracts men of all sorts and conditions.

RANDALL, JAMES RYDER, American journalist; author of "Maryland, my Maryland," "Stonewall Jackson," and other popular lyrics, which greatly heartened the Southern cause in the Civil War; born in Baltimore; engaged in teaching till he took to journalism (1889-1908).

RANDOLPH, JOHN, a noted eccentric American politician, born in Cawsons, Virginia; entered Congress in 1799, and held a commanding position there as leader of the Democratic party; was a witty, sarcastic speaker; sat in the Senate from 1825 to 1827, and in 1830 was Minister to Russia; liberated and provided for his slaves (1773-1833).

RANDOLPH, SIR THOMAS, English diplomatist, was sent on diplomatic missions by Queen Elizabeth, and was particularly mixed up in Scottish intrigues, eventually having to flee from Scotland for his life; left Memoirs (1623-1690).

RANDOLPH, THOMAS, English poet, wrote odes and sundry dramas, of which the "Muses' Looking-Glass" and "Amynas" are the best (1606-1688).

RANEE, name given to a Hindu princess or queen; a rajah's wife.

RANELAGH, a place of resort in grounds at Chelsea of people of fashion during the last half of the 18th century, with a promenade where music and dancing were the chief attractions. The gardens were closed in 1804. At the present time the name has been given to a polo club in the vicinity of Fulham.

RANGOON, capital and chief port of British Burma, situated 20 m. inland from the Gulf of Martaban, on the Hlaing or Rangoon River, the eastmost of the delta streams of the Irrawaddy; British since 1852; a well-appointed city of modern appearance, strongly fortified; contains the famous Shway-Dagon pagoda erected in the 6th century A.C.; has extensive docks, and negotiates the vast bulk of Burmese exports and imports; the former include teak, gums, spices, and rice.

RANJIT SINGH, the maharajah of the Sikhs, after taking possession of Lahore, became undisputed master of the Punjab, and imposed on his subjects the monarchical form of government, which was shattered to fragments after his death; he was the possessor of the Koh-i-Nur diamond (1780-1839).

RANJITSINGHJI, the Maharajah of Nawanagar, born in Sarodar; studied at Cambridge; devoted himself to cricket, and became famous for his batting, playing for Sussex and England (1872-).

RANKE, LEOPOLD VON, German historian, born in Thuringia; began life as a teacher, and devoted his leisure hours to the study of history and the publication of historical works; was in 1825 appointed professor of History at Berlin; was commissioned by the Prussian government to explore the historical archives of Vienna, Rome, and Venice, the fruit of which was seen in his subsequent historical labours; German history, but those of Italy, France, and even England; of his numerous works, all founded on the impartial study of facts, it is enough to mention here his "History of the Popes in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries" and his "German History in the Times of the Reformation" (1795-1886).

RANKINE, W. J. MACQUORN, mathematician and physicist, born in Edinburgh; devoted himself to engineering, and held the chair of Engineering in Glasgow University; wrote extensively on mathematical and physical subjects, both theoretical and practical, including molecular physics (1820-1872).

RANNOCH, an elevated, dreary moorland in NW. of Perthshire, crossed by the West Highland Railway; Loch Rannoch, and Tummel lie to the E. and Loch Llynch to the W.

RANTERÄ, a name given to the Primitive Methodists who seceded from the Wesleyan body.

RANZ DES VACHES, a simple melody, played on the horn by the Swiss Alpine herdsmen as they drive their cattle to or from the pasture, which, when played in foreign lands, produces in a Swiss an almost irrepressible yearning for home.

RAPE OF THE LOCK, a dainty production by Pope, pronounced by Stopford Brooke to be "the most brilliant occasional poem in the language"; it is based on an incident ascribed to the Lord Petre of that day, who cut off a lock of hair from the head of Arabella Fermor and thus occasioned a feud between the two families.

RAPHAEL, one of the seven archangels and the guardian of mankind, conducted Tobias to the country of the Medes and aided him in capturing the miraculous fish, an effigy of which, as also a pilgrim's staff, is an attribute of the archangel.

RAPHAEL SANTI, celebrated painter, sculptor, and architect, born in Urbino, son of a painter; studied under Perugino for several years, visited Florence in 1604, and chiefly lived there till 1508, when he was called to Rome by Pope Julius II., where he spent the rest of his short life and founded a school, several of the members of which became eminent in art. He was one of the greatest of artists, and his works, which were numerous and varied, included frescoes, cartoons, madonnas, portraits, easel pictures, drawings, &c., besides sculpture and architectural designs, and all within the brief period of 37 years. He had nearly finished "The Transfiguration" when he died of fever caught in the excavations of Rome. He was what might be called a learned artist, and his works were the fruits of the study of the masters that preceded him, particularly Perugino and the Florentines, and only in the end might his work be called his own; it is for this reason that modern Pre-Raphaelitism is so called, as presumed to be observant of the simple dictum of Ruskin, "Look at Nature with your own eyes, and paint only what yourselves see" (1483-1520). See PRE-RAPHAELITISM.

RAPIN DE THOYRAS (Paul de Rapin), French historian, born in Castres; driven from France by the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, settled in Holland, came over to England with and served under the Prince of Orange, withdrew to Holland and wrote a "History of England," deservedly much in repute for long (1661-1725).

The first was passed in 1832 after two rejections, and abolished certain "pocket boroughs" and gave the vote to town-dwellers who paid a rent of £10. The 1867 Reform Bill gave a household and lodger franchise in boroughs, and further extensions were made in 1884. The 1918 Act extended the franchise to women over 30 and abolished all property qualification as well as plural voting. A measure of 1928 established universal suffrage regardless of sex at the age of 21.

REFORMATION, the great religious movement of the 16th century in which a large section of the Church broke away from Rome. The revival of learning consequent upon the fall of Constantinople was in part responsible for the movement, which was also fostered by the growing nationalist spirit of Western Europe fretting under the domination of Rome. The first clash came when Luther defied Leo X. and stood out at the Diet of Worms for the right of individual liberty. In England the occasion of the Reformation was more political than theological. Henry VIII wanting a divorce from Catherine of Aragon and the Pope refusing to grant one. This led to Henry proclaiming himself Head of the Church in England, and the establishment of the Church of England in 1534. Socially the Reformation was of immediate importance by giving the Crown a new source of revenue, the incomes of the monasteries that were dissolved.

RELATIVITY OF KNOWLEDGE, the doctrine that all knowledge is of things as they appear to us and not of things as they are in themselves, is subjective and not objective, is phenomenal and not noumenal.

RELATIVITY, THEORY OF, a mathematical theory put forward by Albert Einstein (q.v.), the full understanding of which is only possible to those who have had a thorough training in the higher mathematics. This Special Theory followed on the Michelson-Morley experiment which attempted unsuccessfully to detect a difference in the velocity of light in directions parallel and perpendicular to that of the earth's motion and so obtain a measure of the earth's absolute motion in space; Einstein's theory states that it is impossible to measure an absolute motion and, furthermore, the apparent velocity of light is the same for all observers, whatever their motion or the motion of the source of light, since the standards of time and length vary with the velocity in such a way that the velocity of light remains constant; the General Theory published in 1915 was put forward as an explanation of gravitational phenomena based on a non-Euclidean four-dimensional geometry; the idea of a force of gravitation was rejected, it being assumed that a body naturally moves along the shortest line in space and that space is distorted in the neighbourhood of matter, causing it to move in such a way that it appears to be attracted; the theory gives an entirely different explanation of gravitation from that of Newton; it was found that there were two tests which could be applied to the theory; the first was carried out at the Total Eclipse of 1919, when the ray of light from a distant star was found to be bent on passing the sun by the amount predicted by Einstein, and, secondly, the theory gave an explanation of certain irregularities in the motion of the planet Mercury, which could not be accounted for by the Newtonian mechanics; later papers of Einstein dealt with magnetic and electrical phenomenon; although the theory is essentially mathematical a number of writers have produced books on the philosophical consequences of relativity.

RELIEF, prominence of a sculpture from a plain surface; works in relief are of three kinds: alto-relievo, high relief; mezzo-relievo, medium relief; basso-relievo, low relief.

RELIGIO MEDICI, a celebrated work by Sir Thomas Browne (q.v.), characterised as a "confession of intelligent, orthodox, and logical supernaturalism couched in some of the most exquisite English ever written."

RELIGION, a sense, affecting the whole character and life, of dependence on, reverence for, and responsibility to a Higher Power; or a mode of thinking, feeling, and acting which respects, trusts in, and strives after God, and determines a man's duty and destiny in this universe, or "the manner in which a man feels himself to be spiritually related to the unseen world."

RELICUARY, name given to a portable shrine or case for relics of saints or martyrs; it assumed many forms, and was often rich in material and of exquisite design.

REMARQUE, ERICH MARIA, German writer. A student when the Great War broke out, he enlisted at 18, served in the trenches, and took afterwards to teaching and later business. In 1929 he published "All Quiet on the Western Front," a vivid, realistic study of the horrors of modern war, and with it achieved instantaneous success throughout the world (1898-).

REMBRANDT, or Van Rejn. Harmensz, a celebrated Dutch historical and portrait painter as well as etcher, born in Leyden, where he began to practice as an etcher; removed in 1630 to Amsterdam, where he spent the rest of his life and acquired a large fortune, but lost it in 1656 after the death of his first wife, and sank into poverty and obscurity; he was a master of all that pertains to colouring and the distribution of light and shade; of his pictures "The Woman Taken in Adultery" is in the National Gallery, London, while a number of his etchings are preserved in the British Museum (1606-1669).

REVELATION, name properly applicable to the knowledge of God, or of divine things, imparted to the mind of man, by the operation of the Divine Spirit in the human soul, and as apprehended by it.

REVELATION, BOOK OF, or The Apocalypse, the book that winds up the accepted canon of Holy Scripture, of the fulfilment of the prophecies of which there are three systems of interpretation: the preterist, which regards them all as fulfilled; the historical, which regards them as all along fulfilling; and the futurist, which regards them as still all to be fulfilled. The first is the one which finds favour among modern critics, and which regards it as a forecast of the struggle then impending between the Church under the headship of Christ and the civil power under the emperor of Rome, though this view need not be accepted as excluding the second theory, which regards it as a forecast of the struggle of the Church with the world till the cup of the world's iniquity is full and the day of its doom is come. The book appears to have been written on the occurrence of some fierce persecution at the hands of the civil power, and its object to confirm and strengthen the Church in her faith and patience by a series of visions, culminating in one of the Lamb seated on the throne of the universe as a pledge that all His slain ones would one day share in His glory.

REVELS, MASTER OF THE, also called Lord of Miracles, in olden times an official attached to royal and noble households to superintend the amusements, especially at Christmas time; he was a permanent officer at the English court from Henry VIII.'s reign till George III.'s, but during the 18th century the office was a merely nominal one.
